players' pension program.

The final word on the controversy that has introduced a note of discord into the major leagues' annual meeting was to come from a joint meeting of the American league and National league owners regarding the proposal of the game's ex-ecutive committee that the pension plan be scrapped.

It was learned that the American league owners would vote to keep the pension program. Whether National league owners would follow suit was not known.

Frick for Pensions

But, should a deadlock arise, it is virtually certain that Commissioner Ford Frick will rule in favor of keeping the plan. For one thing, Frick has stated positively several times durpositively several times during the past week that he favors pensions. For another, he said when appointed commissioner that he would settle deadlocks by voting in favor of "no change."

Though the owners are excepted to maintain the fact that the content of th pected to maintain the "status quo" as regards pensions, there is no indication that they intend to grant the players any of the demands they made for larger pension payments and for lowering the starting pension age from 50 to 45.

Also slated for settlement today are demands by the play-ers for a boost in the minimum salary from $5,000 to $7,500, an increase in the meal allow ance, and other items
