When The Great Scorer picks His All-Americans And writes against their names, He will not look at the clipping pile Whence came their gridiron fam TIME FOR EVERYBODY'S ALL-AMERICAN

Twenty-nine players have made the first team of either one All-American selection or another, according to our annual "consensus All-American" made up of six of the best known pickers. Still unheard from is the Saturday Evening Post, upon which we have waited patiently to produce its favored 11, but we'll be surprised if a variation occurs.

Our six participants are the Associated Press, United Press, International News Service, Sporting News, Look and Colliers maga-Only Look has the outright flippancy to name 22, recognizing like others the dangers involved in saying "fhese eleven are the best" of thousands. The 22 now take the place of Look's now take the place of Look's usual first, second, third teams and 'boorable men-tions. We think it note-worthy that of 14 named only once to a first team, nine were on Look's dream team of 22, including such seldom-knowns as Jerry Hilgenberg, Iowa center; Ed Meadows, Duke tackle: John Carson, Georgia end; and Ken Buck, COP end.

It also was the only to choose

PAUL GIEL ... Everybody's All-American

Milt Bohart of Washington, a guard. The A.P. stuck with the majority this year except for end Sam Morley of Stanford; being the only one to name Bobby Garrett's pass receiver. Garrett got only on Look's. It was the A.P. which was alone in selecting Washington's Don Heinrich a few years back.

COLLIER'S LISTENS TO COACHES

Of all the methods of arriving at 11 good and true playes, Of all the methods of arriving at 11 good and true playes, we think the Collier's system is the dandiest for it most nearly takes it out of the hands of the publicists. Personally, we had wotes in both the A.P. and United Press polls but knew that we would have to base it on what we heard and read, al-though we saw every Coast conference team play at least once except Southern California. For example, the day we saw UCLA's Paul Cameron be disappointed us, but he was one of three to get on all first teams. Strange isn't it, that Cameron broke all UCLA's yardage records except that of Kenny Washington, yet Washington, a Negro, was left off the All-Americas of his day.

HERE ARE THE METHODS OF PICKING THEM

Collier's 64th All-America was selected by the American Football Coaches association of 527 coaches, based first on their on-the-field observations, scouting reports and studies of game movies.

The three news services, A.P., U.P., and I.N.S., solicited votes of sports writers and radio broadcasters who subscribe to their news.

Look listed its 22 from votes of the Football Writers As-sociation of America with a membership of 700 who reported regularly to the association's secretary. At the end of the season a committee and Grantland Rice sorted the findings, and presto, hyar they are. Sporting News polled 150 football writers, sportscasters and, of all people, college publicity chiefs Look listed its 22 from votes of the Football Writers As-

Sporting News poiled 150 football writers, sportscaste and, of all people, college publicity chiefs. So we find that the only ones getting unanimous se-lection are three backs and a lineman: Tackle Stanley Jones of Maryland, Johnny Latiner of Notre Dame, Paul Giel of Minnesota and Cameron of UCLA. Getting five of six first teams were End Don Dohoney of Michigan State, Guard J. D. Roberts of Oklahoma, and Guard Crawford Mims of Mississippi.
