Planning Huge Atom Smasher

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Atomic Energy Commission, searching for still more power out of the heart of the atom, plans a "smashing machine" 10 times more powerful than any now in operation. AEC said Saturday the structure, about half a mile around, will be built at Brookhaven National Laboratory, Upton, Long Island. Its principal component will be a huge circular magnet. The 20-million-dollar installation will take about six years to build. It is designed to speed up sub-atomic "bullets" nearly to the velocity of light and beam them at atomic nuclei. The resulting knowledge, scientists hope, will help trap more of the nuclear energy released when an atom is smashed. Most of it now is lost.

All Ike Can Be Sure of Is Making People Angry

By JAMES MARLOW
 WASHINGTON (AP)—All President Eisenhower could be sure about today, when he handed Congress his suggestions for changing the Taft-Hartley labor law, was that he'd make quite a few people mad. Sight unseen, but because his ideas on changes were described as moderate, Eisenhower was a cinch to displease union leaders and those businessmen who wanted it made tougher or not changed at all. The most he could hope was that a majority of businessmen and organized workers would consider his proposals reasonable and good and that Congress would feel the same way and translate them into law. But he couldn't be sure beforehand. And particularly he couldn't be sure that Congress, before quitting next summer, would make any changes or, if it did, that they would be the ones he suggested. What Eisenhower offered today represented the end of much stumbling around inside the administration and the President's own official family on the question of amending Taft-Hartley. Last year congressional committees held weeks of hearings on the law, letting all interested parties—labor, business and others—have their say on what should or shouldn't be done. When a committee is considering legislation on a law as controversial and basic as Taft-Hartley, it would be usual for an administration spokesman to state his views and very unusual if one didn't. Last year no one from the administration appeared. The job of testifying for the administration would have fallen to the secretary of labor, Martin P. Durkin. Durkin stayed away. The result: Congress didn't act T-H in 1953. Later, when Durkin quit the Cabinet in September, it became pretty clear why he hadn't gone before the committee. The administration through last winter, spring and summer had been unable to make up its mind on what T-H changes it thought should be made. Durkin complained, on the day he resigned, that he had been working with Eisenhower's White House aides on suggested changes, thought they had White House approval, and then found out they didn't. Eisenhower said he had never broken his word to an associate. So between last September and now the Eisenhower people have whipped up a list of changes, probably fewer than Durkin wanted.

which the President could say represented his considered opinion. Nevertheless, the difficulties encountered by Eisenhower on this subject were fairly mild when compared with those of former President Truman, under whose administration, when the Republicans controlled Congress in 1947, T-H was passed. Truman went a lot further than Eisenhower. He wanted T-H taken off the books, which was what union labor leaders wanted. But in the following years, when his Democrats ran Congress, he couldn't do anything either. During his administration—when it was clear that enough Democrats and Republicans in Congress were joined together in opposing outright repeal—organized labor might have been able to settle for some changes. But it wouldn't. And it got nothing. Any changes this Congress might make won't end the dispute. Organized labor will certainly be in pitching next year for more changes. This is a quarrel which will probably go on for years since T-H is at the very heart of management-labor relations.
