Federal Aid for Schools Sought

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. McClellan (D-Ark) and 19 other Democratic senators Wednesday proposed a program of federal aid to the states for public school construction.

In a Senate speech, McClellan said it was a no-strings-attached measure which would place special emphasis on helping states least able to help themselves.

The bill proposes no specific appropriation, leaving it to Congress to decide later on the amounts.

McClellan said the bill contains language declaring that no federal department or employ "shall exercise any direction, supervision or control" over schools by reason of the program. McClellan said he thought this would remove much of the ground for opposition which school aid bills.

McClellan said he was introducing the bill with sponsorship also of other Democratic senators including Magnuson and Jackson (Wash.).
