Deetz Defends

Easley said Deetz couldn't comply with the department's bottling and capping regulations, because there is no available equipment for use of gallon jugs.

Easley said it would cost Deetz $5,000 to rebuild his milkhouse to meet the department's requirements.

Deetz also is attacking, by an initiative measure, the state milk control law, under which prices and production quotas are fixed Monday's hearing, however, dealt only with the fluid milk law, under which the department regulates the health and sanitation of milk.

Nichols, answering Easley, said the bacteria count is only one of the health standards in the law, Limited Release "Bacteria count," Nichols said, "has only a limited relevance in determining the quality of the milk. It has nothing to do with the ability of a dairymen to consistently produce good milk."

He added that the department's regulations are reasonable. Answering Easley's argument that the regulations are unconstitutional, Nichols replied that "one has a right to exercise his natural rights in a manner that would jeopardize his fellow man."

Deetz said he has 12 producing registered Jersey cows on his 24-acre farm, which he occupied in 1950. He said he started the gallon jug business in the summer of 1950, when he couldn't find a regular market for his milk, and his neighbors started buying it.

Right-of-Way

Agents Coming

Right of way agents for the Oregon Electric Company will be in Salem Wednesday afternoon to confer with the Marion county court and engineers concerning the South River Road.

In 1912 when the Oregon Electric extended its line south of Salem, the rails were laid along Marion county road property. It was understood at that time that the railroad company would purchase land for use of the county. This was subsequently done, but a check of the records reveals no official action.

Since the development of the road is a joint program involving the federal bureau of roads, it is necessary to clear up the records. The Oregon Electric officials wish to view the premises and confer with the court.

The county is now engaged in securing additional land for widening the road in some places.

East Industries

George Spaur, state forester, said that many men in the logging industry are preparing to resume work, pointing to the fact that more than 3,000 applications for logging permits were filed this month against only 2,000 filed in January a year ago.

"However, work in the woods cannot be resumed until the weather moderates," Spaur said.

T. Morris Dunn, chairman of the state unemployment compensation commission told the conference that he felt the state was on the "plateau" and felt that the worst of the unemployment this winter would be over as soon as the snow disappeared and more moderate weather prevailed.

"Oregon had covered payrolls of $1,500,000 in 1953, a record year, and it is my view that the payrolls in the state will match this amount this year."

People said that much of the work of the commission of which he is chairman must of necessity be "long range" but everything is being done by his group to encourage winter work to "level off the peaks" of unemployment.

R. H. Baldock, state highway engineer, said the state highway commission is endeavoring to speed up road construction and will have $55 million of road work under construction in 1954.

"There are now a total of 3,470 persons employed in construction and maintenance work both in our department and employed by contractors," he said. By August this figure will increase to 8,880 with an average of 5,800 for each of the 12 months."

Governor Patterson requested all present to exert every effort towards bringing about any projects that would relax the present unemployment situation. He requested that direct reports be made to him at frequent intervals.

RED DEAN 80 YEARS TODAY
LONDON (AP) — Dr. Hewlett Johnson, the "Red" Dean of Canterbury, was 80 years old Monday. Dr. Johnson, a strong Communist sympathizer, was awarded a Stalin peace prize in 1951.

Big 4 Outline

As expected, Molotov opened up his guns for Mao Tze-Tung's Red Chinese, calling for a Big Five meeting with them to discuss "measures for reducing tension in international relations."

His plan came out in a general Soviet proposal for a three-point agenda for this meeting. He placed the Chinese question ahead of the other two points—unity of Germany and an Austrian independence treaty.

The text of the agenda proposed by Molotov:

"1. Measures for reducing tension in international relations and the convening of a meeting of foreign ministers of France, Britain, the U. S. the Soviet Union, and the Chinese People's Republic.

Austrian State Treaty
"2. The German question and the problems of ensuring European security."

"3. The Austrian state treaty." Molotov clearly was trying to insure that Red China's claim for international recognition — over which the Western powers do not eye to eye completely—should precede any discussion of the German and Austrian settlements.

His proposal seemed certain to louch off the first major East-West quarrel of this conference because the three Allies have agreed in advance that their aim is to place European affairs at the top of their talking points.

France's Georges Bidault and Britain's Anthony Eden laid their governmental policy declarations on the square table of the parley shortly after the ministers formally convened.

Expansion

Pearl said that Bonneville has been successful in developing a power system through cooperation with publicly-owned and private power companies making up the Northwest power pool.

"We shall do everything possible to continue this cooperation because it is an outstanding example of what the administration believes," he said. "It is partnership with local interests in every sense of the word."

He said expansion would be encouraged under a partnership of federal, private, local, state and municipal power groups.

Pearl declared that while he found in Washington a determined effort to balance the federal budget, there also is a strong determination not to impede essential work.

He said the $30,200,000 in construction funds asked by the Budget Bureau would be used, if appropriated by Congress, to complete transmission lines and substations already approved by Congress and under construction.

These include grid facilities from Grand Coulee and Chief Joseph dams to the Puget Sound area and from McVary Dam to Walla Walla, The Dalles and the Willamette Valley area.

Construction funds asked are $8,666,000 under the current appropriation. The request for $6,600,000 for operations and maintenance is an increase of $596,000.

Steel Soon to Come

For New County Jail

Steel for the construction of the cell blocks in the new county jail which constitutes the top floor of the Court House is expected to reach Salem in the near future, reported Claude Post, member of the contracting firm constructing the building.

Delay in shipping the steel has caused a bit of concern with the contractors as well as the county court. A man experienced in placing the steel will be sent from the factory to supervise its installation.

Post said the work of completing the first three floors is progressing satisfactorily and that it would be possible to use them by late April if the court so desired.
