Robert Howard, from the Air Force ROTC instructor staff at the university, who is adviser to the boys and also an assistant Scout Master. The course will be given for eight Saturdays.

Last Saturday, in addition to receiving their instruction, they visited the submarine "Pargo" where the Portland Naval Reserve submarine division trains.

Their instruction, included first aid, taught by Ernest Trenary, IIM 2, of the Navy, and conduct in emergency, fractures, bleeding and compresses.

"This region's best prospect for industrial development lies in diversified plants, large and small, to give the economy a steadiness it lacks now because the industry is concentrated on processing of foods and forest products," Ivan Bloch, industrial consultant of Portland, told the Chamber of Commerce Monday at a luncheon held in the Hotel Marion.

Bloch said the engineering schools should be developing engineers capable of developing new industries. The brains are here, and the capital can be secured for feasible projects, he said.

Much progress has been made in aluminum, Bloch observed, adding that there are good further prospects in light metals fabrication, plastics and electronics. The big plant which can sometimes be secured is fine, but many small plants are actually to be preserved, he said. A weakness at present is the seasonal character of both food processing and lumbering.

This area also needs better freight rates for outbound industrial commodities. It already has favorable rates for outbound raw materials but is handicapped in trying to manufacture here for out of state markets.

Bloch was introduced by Burr Miller, public relations committee chairman for the Salem Industrial Development Council, some of whose members were seated at the head table. Willard Wilson won the attendance prize, a coupon for frozen meat furnished by Al Hoffman, Chamber President Bill Hammond presided.

COQUILLE — Coos County's new courthouse was officially dedicated here Saturday.

Steel for the construction of the cell blocks in the new county jail which constitutes the top floor of the Court House is expected to reach Salem in the near future, reported Claude Post, member of the contracting firm constructing the building.

Delay in shipping the steel has caused a bit of concern with the contractors as well as the county court. A man experienced in placing the steel will be sent from the factory to supervise its installation.

Post said the work of completing the first three floors is progressing satisfactorily and that it would be possible to use them by late April if the cost so desired.

The first practical mechanical carpet sweepers seem to have appeared about 1865.

Home Owners Want Bridge

A group of Salem business men who own summer cottages along the south bank of the Little North Fork of the Santiam River near Elkhorn approached the County Court Monday in connection with the possibility of securing an old abandoned bridge.

The men stated that an approach to the bridge leading to their property had washed out during high water and that they had no way of getting across the stream.

The bridge sought is a wooden span which was replaced last fall by a steel structure a short distance above the Elkhorn School. The court said the bridge could be made available to the men for the price of $1 if they would remove the span. The court believes that the cost of tearing the span down would just about offset the amount of available salvage.

The interested parties will endeavor to secure a bit of help from the state forestry department since the bridge that washed out was used by the foresters to some extent. The men pointed out that their private span was the only one across the river from the Meyers crossing upstream to Cedar creek.
