Welfare Scrap Now at an End

PENDLETON — The controversy between the State Public Welfare Commission and the Umatilla County Welfare Commission appeared Wednesday to be at an end. M. J. Pinney, vice chairman of the county commission, received a letter from Mrs. Loa Howard Mason, state administrator, saying an audit of the county commission's books explained why Umatilla was without funds to pay December medical bills. State records showed that the county should have had $5,000. Mrs. Mason said the audit revealed that the county commission had revised its budget without notifying or seeking approval of the state. She emphasized that at no time did the state "question the integrity" of the Umatilla County commission. Pinney denied that the budget revision was made without knowledge of the state and said "we will take strong exception" to the state's giving publicity to the county's not having welfare funds without having studied the situation more carefully.

No Probe on Allied Charges

PANMUNJOM — The neutral Armistice Supervisory Commission Thursday declined to investigate U. N. charges that the Communists are smuggling warplanes into North Korea in violation of truce terms. An Allied spokesman said the UNC received oral notification that the commission "could not agree to dispatch three mobile teams" to check the Allied charges. He said the commission gave no reason. It meets Friday.

Swedish members of the four nation commission said they had agreed not to discuss the matter with newsmen. Other members are Switzerland, Poland and Czechoslovakia. Maj. Gen. Julius K. Lacey, chief Allied member of the Joint Military Armistice Commission, charged Tuesday that the Reds have smuggled warplanes from China to nine North Korean fields and brought in other war material along routes which bypass the five Red ports of entry authorized by the armistice agreement. Lacey's protest did not specify the types or number of planes. Nor did it disclose the source of Allied information.

Lethal Artillery May Prevent Death

OLYMPIA, Wash. (AP)—Plans were revealed here Wednesday for using lethal Army artillery to prevent possible death. The plan involves avalanche control with the use of 105 howitzers. Under the proposal the 105's will be taken from Ft. Lewis to the Stevens Pass ski area when conditions are right. There they will blast away at highly hazardous avalanche areas. Ray Hyatt, secretary of the Washington State Safety Council, said the avalanches released by the gunfire can be cleaned off the highways, railroads and ski areas under controlled conditions, thus precluding sudden snowslides that have, in the past, trapped motorists, and skiers. The plan is being carried out through the cooperative effort of the United States Forest Service,

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS Cold Canadian air and northerly winds moved into the mid-continent Thursday, ending a spell of mild winter weather for much of the area. Early Thursday it was below freezing in Amarillo, Tex., but in San Antonio, on the southern part of the state, it was 72. Light snow or snow flurries fell over much of the cold belt and also along most of the eastern slopes of the Northern Rocky Mountains. Temperatures were
