IN TITLE ROLE OF TRAGEDY

Elizabeth Winship, junior from Arlington, Calif., who is cast in the title role of Willamette University's production of the Greek tragedy, "Electra," which will be produced on the stage of Waller Hall Feb. 25-27. A special adaptation of Sophocles' "Electra," taken from eight separate translations, has been edited by Robert Putnam, director of theater.

Players Offer Greek Tragedy

For the first time in more than two decades, the Willamette University Players will present a Greek tragedy on the stage of Waller Hall, February 25-27, at 8:15 p.m.

A special adaptation of Sophocles' "Electra," has been edited by Robert Putnam, director of theater. The transcription has been written to preserve the spirit of the original Greek drama.

Rather than employing the modern-day choral group of two or three members, the Willamette presentation will feature six women in the chorus, adhering as closely as possible to the original Greek element.

The original Greek convention of stage setting was adapted. Plot of "Electra" develops from the unethical dealings of Electra's father (Elizabeth Winship) great-grandfather Pelops. A curse was called down upon Pelops and all of his descendants, prophesying there would always be murder and bloodshed within the family.

Electra's mother, Clytemnestra (Sheila Ryan Laue) conspires with her lover Aegisthus (David Finlay) to murder her husband Agamemnon when he returns from the Trojan war.

Electra, being inordinately fond of her father, develops a tremendous hatred for her mother and a desire to avenge her father's murder. Her only means is through her younger brother Orestes (Carl Ritchie).

As the play opens Orestes returns, now old enough to avenge his father's murder. Interest in the first act lies in the emotional relationships between Electra and her sister Chrysothemis (Clarine Woolley) and her mother. The second act is devoted to the discovery of Orestes' return and the revenge of Agamemnon as brought about by the murder of Clytemnestra and Aegisthus.

State Loans for Dams Proposed

BURNS (AP)—Proposals for the state to make loans for individuals or groups who want to build dams were heard here Thursday at a meeting of the State Water Resources Committee.

Speakers said they favored anything that would encourage development of water resources. Farm and community-sized dams were mentioned.

The Grant County Livestock Assn., then suggested the state loans. Alton Baisey of Riley supported this, saying individuals would be willing to repay long-term loans. Forrester Cooper, a Lake County attorney, also suggested long-term agriculture credit for the same purpose.

The Harney County Stock Growers, the Harney County Land Use Committee and the Polson Creek Grange all favored creation of a permanent water resources committee.

They also suggested a change in the water code to allow county watermasters to settle disputes over irrigation ditches in the same way that disputes over water rights on natural streams are settled. At present requests have to be submitted in writing, before county watermasters can act on the dispute over ditch rights.

Bill Farrell, Canyon City, speaking for the Grant County Livestock Assn., said dams are needed on the North Fork of the John Day River for irrigation, flood control and erosion prevention. He said, however, that there would be opposition to any dams that would take hay land out of production.
