Churches Need Press Agents

NEW YORK—Approximately 95% of effective religious public relations in the country originates with the Roman Catholic Church, according to Malcolm Boyd in the current issue of Episcopal Churchnews Magazine.

A one-time potent public relations man in the motion picture industry who handled such stars as Mary Pickford, Boyd has since turned to religion and is currently studying for the priesthood in a seminary in Berkeley, Calif. In Churchnews, he urges other denominations to follow the example of the Roman Catholic Church and wholeheartedly embrace public relations as a means of spreading the word of God.

"The Church," he points out, "must have its finger on the pulse of the world if it is to minister effectively to men." Newspapers, magazines, radio, television and motion pictures, Episcopal Churchnews states, are media created by God and should be used for His Glory. Churches, he says, should not shrink from the new techniques, but rather master the craftsmanship and "know-how" necessary for utilizing it to the utmost.

St. Paul, says Boyd, was among the first and best press agents. He refers to Abbe Michonneau's speculation that if St. Paul were to come back, he would be a newspaperman or a press agent.

Beginning March 5 the Bonneville pool will be lowered from its present elevation of nominal 78.0 feet to 73.5 feet elevation. It is expected that elevation of 73.5 feet will be reached on March 8.

The pool will then be gradually raised as flow increases until elevation 82.5 feet is reached when the flow equals 490,000 cfs.
