

Adlai Raps GOP At Fairbanks

FAIRBANKS, Alaska (AP) — Adlai Stevenson told a Democratic-sponsored rally here Tuesday night "America's greatest surplus is not wheat—it is the perishable Republican promises of the last election."

The 1952 Democratic presidential candidate, in an informal address at a box luncheon picnic in the Fairbanks Fairgrounds pavilion, said the "only fruits of the grand Republican promises" is that the "free world is on the eve of its greatest disaster since the defeat of Nationalist China."

Stevenson said an oft-repeated statement the "Republican Party has the aims and direction of a blind dog in a meathouse," was no more true anywhere than it appeared to be with regard to the administration's activities in Alaska.

He said he gained no satisfaction from what he said was the present administration's inability to lead this nation in the right direction.

President Eisenhower is not to blame, he added, but a "mysterious force" he said is governing Washington.
