

'Separates' Good for Teen-Agers

By DOROTHY ROE (Associated Press Women's Editor)

Young moderns like their wardrobes in separate parts. Blouses, skirts and jumpers that can be mixed or matched are their particular joy.

They are fashion-wise girls, who have discovered that two separate blouses and two separate skirts can do the work of half-a-dozen one-piece dresses, when judiciously switched.

Blouse designers, taking a cue from the customers, now are making coordinated blouse-and-skirt or jumper-and-blouse outfits that are sold separately in stores, but are planned to be worn together.

One such is Dorothy Korby, who has been turning out blouses for thousands of American girls every year for a lot of years, and now is putting her emphasis on coordinated ensembles. Says she:

"The trouble with most ensembles is that they are not flexible enough. They go together all right, but they aren't successfully geared to go their separate ways."

Miss Korby believes that when a girl finds the perfect skirt to go with her new blouse she will buy it, with the thrifty feeling that both the top and skirt can be worn with other combinations in her wardrobe.

Cotton skirts, blouses and jumpers in coordinated colors are pets of the younger set this season. Skirts may be full or slim, blouses tailored or frilly, and the entire look of the outfit may be changed by switching blouses.
