

Porcupines, Wild Horses Aided by Legislatures

CHICAGO (UP)—Maine's State Legislature came to the aid of porcupines, and Wyoming banned hunting wild horses from a plane. These were among the odd and unusual actions taken by legislatures this year, according to Commerce Clearing House, a private reporting agency on tax and business law.

Maine befriended porcupines when it refused to pass a law to pay a 25-cent state bounty per porcupine. In Maryland, otter and muskrat meat now may be kept more than 10 days after the closing of the hunting season. California legislators banned any group from staging more than one picnic a month at which beer and liquor are sold.

Deer Damage
A bill introduced in the Vermont Legislature asked that a motorist be reimbursed up to $50 for damage done to his car by a wild deer.

A New York law maker proposed that his state pick up the total tab for such damage, and pay also for any foraging done on private property by wild deer. In Kansas, a legislator asked that a bill to ban nudism be submitted to the Committee on Horticulture. He said "nakedness and fruit" are associated in the Book of Genesis.

In Wisconsin a measure was proposed to revoke a beer seller's permit on grounds of Communism and subversion.

Loyal Irish
Several Legislatures sent memorandums to Congress. Massachusetts asked that British troops be removed from Ireland, that Egypt be requested to lift its blockade of the Suez Canal, that the people of Cyprus be granted self-determination and that Bunker Hill be made a national shrine.

Arkansas pondered a memorial designating our speech as "The American Language." California had a bill to repeal the drivers' license exemption on persons driving motorized wheelchairs.

Women just about broke even, the survey showed: Oregon forbade them to participate in professional wrestling, but Michigan now lets them read bar.

HERE is a pleasant little game that will give you a message every day. It is a numerical puzzle designed to spell out your fortune. Count the letters in your first name. If the number of letters is 6 or more, subtract 4. If the number is less than 6, add 3. The result is your key number. Start at the upper left-hand corner of the rectangle and check every one of your key numbers, left to right. Then read the message the letters under the checked figures give you.
