Each Nation to Burglars Busy

This, he said, would lessen danger and help relax world tension. Premier Faure remarked he wished all the peoples of the world could have been in the chamber to hear Eisenhower. If that were possible, Faure added, maybe they would realize that on July 21, 1955 — Thursday — something changed in the world and the first victory over skepticism was scored at the conference.
Eden called Eisenhower's proposals far-reaching and added that he had been deeply moved by the President's sincerity about world peace.
Hagerty reported that Eden made some disarmament inspection proposals on Britain's behalf and Faure talked about budgetary controls over disarmament.
Bulgaria, meanwhile, countered with a proposal that the four big powers sign a declaration at the summit conference declaring that they "undertake not to be the first in the use of atomic weapons against any nation and call upon all other states to join in this declaration."
These developments came as the Big Four turned to the issue of disarmament and postponed until Friday a foreign ministers' report on their study of European security and German unification. The foreign ministers were reported in substantial agreement on arrangements to resume the talks on Germany at a Big Four foreign ministers' meeting in October.
In discussing disarmament, one of the major topics on the conference agenda, the President said he would like to address his remarks particularly to the Soviet delegation. He added he wanted to do that because both the United States and Russia have new and terrible weapons in such quantities as to make horrible destruction possible.
Then Eisenhower proposed the blueprint exchange and aerial inspection of the two countries' military installations.
The foreign ministers prepared their report after receiving a new Russian proposal on European security. The Soviet delegation also came up with disarmament proposals, which Hagerty said were based on Bulganin's remarks at Monday's opening meeting.
President Eisenhower, in preparation for the disarmament talks, had his chief of staff, Adm. Arthur Radford, and his disarmament adviser, Harold E. Stassen, as lunch guests.
Secretary of State Dulles and other top members of the U. S. delegation dined with Soviet Foreign minister Molotov.
There was no indication what the foreign ministers' report on European security and German unification contained.

President Says

U. S. experts are convinced the Kremlin's fear of U. S. nuclear power and air bases is genuine and that this has controlled their past negative policies.
Before receipt of the President's report was announced, Sen. Wiley of Wisconsin, senior Republican on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, said he "fully expects" Eisenhower to report to the people when he returns from Geneva.
So far as he knows now, Wiley said, no arrangements have been worked out yet under which Eisenhower would report by television or radio.

Bomb Explodes

Announcement that the fleet had to be put to sea immediately recalled reports just after the July 16 revolt that disident naval units had fled aboard two of the navy's larger ships. These reports later proved untrue. The government said recently that the navy is completely loyal, following a reshuffling of the top naval command and the arrest of three admirals charged with masterminding the revolt.
Naval authorities said the maneuvers had been planned for two months, long before the revolt. Such exercises are customary at this time of year.

Merrifield

He also pointed out the officer's testimony that Merrifield was arrested at the scene and the senator's testimony that he knew nothing about being arrested until after the arrival at police headquarters.
It is the word of two officers doing their duty against the word of a reputable man who must defend himself against a charge; a man who has a strong motive, perhaps even a subconscious motive to defend himself, Adams said.
Adams concluded his argument after 30 minutes and Defense Attorney Peery Buren then presented the defense statements.
Buren represented the officers as confused due to discrepancy in statements; not knowing that Merrifield was a state senator in the U. S. senator and making out a second citation because of an error on the first.
He asked "Is this reasonable?" to testimony of the arresting officer that Merrifield had said "probably too much" when asked how much he had had to drink. He asked the same question about the testimony that the arrest was made while Merrifield was still in the car and "with only the odor of liquor to go by." A drunken woman was in the car, he pointed out.
On Merrifield's reported statement of "I'm glad you came along, I need help," Buren said, "He did need help!" (In Tuesday's testimony, the officer quoted Merrifield as saying, "I'm glad you came along. I didn't want to drive any more.")
Buren concluded by saying that Merrifield was doing a public duty in taking the woman to the state hospital and should not only be acquitted but should be commended.
State Senator John Merrifield testified in his own behalf Wednesday that a woman in his car whom he was transporting to the Oregon state hospital was responsible for his erratic driving shortly before his June 18 arrest on a charge of driving while intoxicated.
As indicated by the opening statements of defense attorney Peery Buren, Merrifield said that the woman, Patricia Young, now a patient at the state hospital, was very drunk and unruly and made the trip "a nightmare" by constantly hitting at his shoulder and back and grabbing at the wheel. She was a virtual stranger to him, he said, and he was transporting her to the hospital at her request because of his association with the state mental health organization and his membership on the ways and

Find Grave

An ironic twist of fate made Abbott's wife eligible to apply for the $2,500 reward posted by Stephanie's parents.
The reward was offered for information leading to her discovery. In Berkeley, police agreed the key information that led to the body was Mrs. Abbott's discovery of Stephanie's purse.
The body was found on a steep hillside about 600 feet from the cabin by reporter Ed Montgomery and photographer Bob Bryant of the San Francisco Examiner, and the two ranchers.
Montgomery, a 1950 Pulitzer Prize winner for exposing federal income tax rackets, followed a hunch that led to discovery of the girl's body.
Montgomery, feeling that a search by officers around Abbott's mountain cabin, had not been wide enough, persuaded Harold Jackson, one of the ranchers, to bring his dogs into a search. The reporter said he and Bryant had noticed an "odd odor" on a manzanita-covered ridge near the cabin Tuesday.
He and Bryant had to wait until Jackson got through work late Wednesday before they could make the search with the dogs.

KOREANS CURB JAP TRAVEL

means committee of the legislature, which must approve the funds for the state hospital.
12 Witnesses
Twelve witnesses were called during the afternoon session of the court, bringing to 14 the total to appear on the stand. The twelve included Merrifield, Oregon reporter William Lambert, two employees of the hotel where Mrs. Young lived, state hospital Superintendent Dean Brooks, two hospital employees, Mrs. Merrifield, state police Sgt. Wayne Huffman, and three other officers. In the morning session, arresting officer Floyd Morrill and officer George C. Simons had testified on events at the scene where Merrifield stopped his car.
Lambert testified that he and Merrifield had had two drinks about two hours before the time of the arrest, although Merrifield had not finished the second. Merrifield's drinks were Martinis, he said. Merrifield corroborated this testimony and said they were the only drinks he had had that day.
After leaving Lambert, he said, he went to Mrs. Young's hotel, where with the assistance of two hotel employees, he got her and her luggage into the car. She was very drunk, both he and two hotel employees testified.
Goes to His Home
Merrifield then went to his home, he said, to get his wife to go with them. She was not home, he found, and was contacted by phone but was unable to go alone, he testified, so he decided to make the trip without assistance with Mrs. Young.
Twice before he got through Oregon City he had to pull off the road twice when Mrs. Young got violent, he said, and in Oregon City, he was stopped by an officer who let him go when he explained what was causing his erratic driving.
His worst trouble came between Woodburn and Gervais junction, he said, when Mrs. Young turned off the ignition, pulled the keys from the switch and tried to jump from the car. He pulled off the road, he testified, just as she opened the door and fell out into the ditch. He took the keys from her and got her back into the car and started on again, stopping at Gervais junction, he testified. At that time, Officer Morrill's car pulled
