Both Parties Detect Signs of Fall Victory in Primary Vote

Portland, Ore. (AP)—Republicans and Democrats analyzed the Oregon primary election results to detect signs of victory in the fall.

Their claims centered about the crucial Senate race between Democratic Sen. Wayne Morse and Douglas McKay, the recently resigned secretary of interior who won Republican nomination in the primary.

McKay campaigned strenuously to defeat Phil Hitchcock, a church leader and former state senator, and two lesser opponents. Democrats jubilantly pointed out McKay did not gain a majority of the Republican vote.

Nearly complete returns from the slow count gave McKay 118,165 votes to 121,331 for his combined opponent. That was about 49 per cent of the total. Hitchcock, who campaigned as a man who could win liberal voters away from Morse, had 94,943 votes.

Monroe Sweetland, Democratic national committeeman for Oregon, called this "the most significant result" of the primary, and added it was "a very good omen of Sen. Morse's victory in November."

Republicans were just as quick to point out that Morse's opponent on the Democratic ballot, Woody Smith, a political novice from Hood River, polled 39,221 votes while Morse was running up 191,159.

Republican leaders interpreted the vote for Smith as a protest against Morse's shift to the Democratic party after breaking with the Republicans four years ago. They predicted McKay would pick up nearly all of the Smith vote in the fall.

There were no signs of acrimony as an aftermath of the Republican campaign. Hitchcock congratulated McKay and said they both had held to a common goal—defeat of Morse in the fall. He pledged his aid to McKay.

McKay, before leaving for a week's rest at his Oregon Beach cottage, said he viewed his nomination as a vote of confidence in the Eisenhower administration.

The ballot count was slow, but fewer than 60 small, outlying precincts were unreported yesterday as the vote confirmed Adlai Stevenson's 85 victory margin over Sen. Estes Kefauver in the Democratic presidential write-in contest.

About 60 per cent of the registered Democrats voted, and of those voting about 63 per cent wrote in the name of Kefauver or Stevenson—a higher total than election officials had expected.

Stevenson got 68,262 votes, Kefauver 26,829.

Stevenson also got Oregon's 16 delegates to the Democratic National Convention and a psychological boost for the primaries coming up in Florida and California.

His victory here was in a state that Kefauver had captured in 1952, and in a state where Republicans and Democrats cannot cross over to the other's ballot.

About 63 per cent of the registered Republicans turned out and 92 per cent of them marked their ballots for President Eisenhower, who was unopposed. He had 221,471 votes, the greatest number in either party.

Sen. Elmo Smith was next, piling up 217,945 as he won Republican nomination to succeed himself. His opponent was a political unknown, Earl Dickson, Albany grocer, who had 22,809 votes.

Smith's opponent will be Robert D. Holmes, Astoria radio station manager, who won the Democratic nod as expected, although his margin of victory was so narrow it gave party leaders a fright.

His opponent, Lew Wallace, Portland insurance man who has been on statewide ballots several times, announced some time ago he was withdrawing from the race because of a heart condition.

Nevertheless he ran up 100,102 votes. Holmes, who campaigned only lightly despite the fact it was his first time on a statewide ballot, barely squeezed ahead with 106,321.

Vice President Nixon was credited with 26,813 write-in votes for vice president, but his support undoubtedly was more than that. A number of counties decided against counting his total at this time, and the vote for him will not be determined until the official canvass several weeks hence.

East Side E-R Measure Gets 406-Vote Edge

Schrunk Leads 17,000 Over Peterson; Run-off Scheduled

PORTLAND (AP)—This city's $8,000,000 expansion recreation center apparently will be located on the east side of the Willamette River.

After a heated campaign, voters approved by a margin of 406 votes a measure which restricts the site to the East Side. The vote was 64,209 to 63,803. The result was not determined until returns from the last precinct were counted from Friday's election.

A mayor's committee chose the South Auditorium site at the edge of the West side business district. East side residents then put the issue on the ballot.

Sheriff Terry Schrunk of Multnomah County will have to go into a runoff election next November with the man he is trying to unseat, Mayor Fred Peterson.

Schrunk emerged from Friday's primary election with a 17,000-vote lead over Peterson, but with seven other candidates in the field, he fell short of the needed majority.

Schrunk had 69,233 votes, about 46 per cent of the total. Peterson had 52,185. The other seven divided about 23,000 votes.
