AFTER HUNGARY Men in Kremlin Can't Ever Feel Safe Again

By NATHAN POLOWETZKY

LONDON (AP)—After Hungary, the men in the Kremlin can never feel safe again.

Wherever they turn, they must fear the threat that millions of freedom fighters will rebel against their tyranny.

Today Hungary. Perhaps tomorrow Romania, then Czechoslovakia, then East Germany, Poland, Albania and even Bulgaria.

The bloodthirsty repression of the Hungarian uprising was the act of men terrified by the thought of the downfall of their empire.

For the first shot fired by the Budapest rebels destroyed the myth of Communist-world solidarity.

It wrote an end to the notion that Russia has an elaborate system of "friendly" buffer states constructed by Stalin at the point of a bayonet to safeguard Soviet borders.

Soviet foreign and military policy had been based on this structure.

The Kremlin had poured arms and equipment into the satellites to build up their armies. Russian officers had trained them and in many cases led them.

Communist bosses had carefully purged their armies of suspected "subversive" elements. They handed over responsibility only to handpicked men after long periods of Communist indoctrination.

Yet in the Hungarian uprising the army defected, joined forces with the rebels and armed them.

The rebellion brought home to Soviet military men one important point: Satellites could hardly be trusted in a war.

Apparently in fear and desperation, seeing their military alliances disappearing, Soviet leaders gave the signal for the bloody repression.

The Hungarian rebellion also shook the Soviet theory that good and faithful Communists can be created by constant indoctrination and education.

The Kremlin is now faced with the problem of how to act if "freedom rebellions" break out in the other satellite states.

More bloody reprisals might result in a setback in Soviet efforts to win over the neutralist nations of the world, particularly in Asia, where strong-arm tactics will be interpreted as a return to the iron rule of Stalin.

In any event a wholesale reappraisal of Communist tactics and doctrine seems to be the immediate order of the day for the Soviet rulers.

Highway Crash Injures Pair

William D. Clark, 2209 Lee St., driver of the 1952 Hudson, was treated at Salem Memorial hospital for a facial laceration and was later released. Stoaks and Davis were reported in good condition Monday at the hospital.

The accident occurred about 5:45 p.m. near Holman park, police said.
