WHERE TO HUNT DUCKS?

Nownays one of the big, if not the biggest, problems factd by the duck hunter is finding a place to shoot. Some are favored by having the finances to own or lease duck ponds, but the vast majority of us are working men with modest incomes, who must find their hunting at are working men with in the lowest possible cost.

HUNTING GRONDS DECREASING

While there are still a great many farmers who will allow the hunter to use their property, more land is being closed constantly. We recall a terrific pend down south of Halsey a few years back. The farmer let all and slundry shoot there—until, inevitably, some chaps with plenty of cash made the farmer an offer he could not resist. Now a few hunt where many once did—and you can scarcely put any blame on the chaps who leased the pond. Any of the rest of us would have done the same thing, if we could have afforded it.

Without doubt, it's getting harder and harder to find a place to set up a blind. Public shooting grounds are a great help, and in time more of them will have to come into existence to balance the loss of privately leased or posted land.

RIVERS STILL BELONG TO THE PUBLIC

This writer finds his shooting along rivers—primarily the Willamelte. Yamhili, and occasionally the Pudding. There are several effective ways to hunt the rivers, and they do produce some excellent gunning. Right now, river hunting is picking up as the northern birds put in an appearance. There is very little surface water anywhere in the fields, which means that there is plenty of bird-traffic along streams.

Now while the Willamette is still fairly low, it's a simple matter to heat to a good location, set out the decoys and pull the heat into the brush. Later when the river rages and roars with flood water, small beats and motors are none too safe.

RIVER GUNNING "MUSTS"; A DOG OR A BOAT

Frankly, we like our feet on firm ground when we shoot. We know of a number of farmers who will let us walk across their property to the river. We select a backwater, put out a dozen decoys and hunker down in the brush. Bird respond well to a call along the river, and if you have a good refrieving dog to pick up the birds, you are in busi-

Without a host or a dog, however, you are likely to loose most of your birds downriver. We have seen hunters who weren't both-ered by watching dead or crippled ducks carried away on the wa-ter, but the loss of a game-bird always gives us a had feeling where

JUMP-SHOOT BOATING LOTS OF FUN

On smaller streams like the Pudding and Yamhill, drifting in a boat provides plenty of jump-shooting sport. Even when the birds are not flying, the boater can usually scare a few up from the water close to the bank. While we have had an interest in several ponds in the past, and enjoy pond shooting when some of our friends are kind enough to invite us to their private ponds, still we can honestly say that we love free-lance river shooting best of all. There's always the excitement of the unplanned and unexpected to make us fully appreciate the great sport of waterfowl gunning . . .

Here's a letter from a former Wyoming hunter who has a few sharp comments on the either-sex hunts of Oregon: "Dear Mr. Brown: "Dear Mr. Brown: "Dear Mr. Brown: "I have lived in Salem for the past eight years and have never hunted deer in Oregon. However, I lived in Wyoming for some 25 years and did my share of hunting and fishing there. There was no sex discriminated there regarding the hunting of big game. Either bucks or does for deer and antelope, bulls or cows among the elk and moose. The big game population has thrived over the years. How about New Jersey or Pennsylvania, where the deer population has increased with human beings." "Have any of the 'outraged Oregonians' ever heard of a cattle ranch? Imngine, if you can, a prosperous cattle baron who "saved" the heifers and butchered the bulls. "I never was a 'sport' hunter, as we killed game for food pur-

the heifers and butchered the bulls. "I never was a 'sport' hunter, as we killed game for food pur-poses in my younger days. We NEVER brought home bucks or bulls because we knew 'Pappy' would give us a hide-ing if we did. Two-year old dry does or cows, never shot one that was scared or running because that made the meat tough, always shoot them through the head or neck so that we got all the meat. I have never taken a shot at a critter that was over 100 yards away. However, we never shot any hunters, either. shot any hunters, either.

'Let's all get together now and be good sports and kill only the male of the species, both among domesticated and wild animals. Let us strive for monogamy among our animal friends. One buck for each doe and let the hunters go among them and take only those die of old age." — Wendell C. Munson, 860 E Street, Salerr
