Washington Scene . . .

—By Lillian Porter Say

WASHINGTON, Jan. 16 (Special)—When the President and First Lady heard the world premiere of the mixed choir of Howard University and their wives. The dinner in honor of the Cabinet and their wives will be February 4. First entertaining for a top figure from a foreign land in 1947 will be for Saud Arabia's King, who will arrive in Washington January 30 for a three-day official visit.

Even though they are deeply sympathetic with the Hungarians many women have remarked: "I can't imagine my husband fleeing the country while he leaves me and our children to fend for themselves."

A former Portland woman, Katherine Mills, who is a national deputy director of the office of volunteers at the American National Red Cross, has the answer to that one.

"If your husband had taken part in the revolt and would be shot the moment he appeared in public," said Katherine, "you would urge him to flee."

She has just returned from Bremerton in the Military Sea Transport Service Gem, William G. Haan with 1,716 Hungarian refugees.

From the time Katherine embarked on the Haan with other Red Cross workers her every moment was spent in anticipation of that high one the morning before Christmas. She stood on the dock at Bremerton and saw hundreds and hundreds of long haired youths piled up in each window of a whole train, just looking at our ship.

Came that time when a Hungarian read out each name and the refugees were told that without a certain ticket they could not embark. Soon they started up the gangway of the Haan. They responded to Katherine's long practiced Hungarian greeting with a smile. Characteristically, a young American sailor appointed himself the Santa Claus job of giving each child a stocking. When they were tiny children, he stooped down to pass them out. The children beamed with delight. "Never," said Katherine, "have I seen brighter or prettier children anywhere!"

Followed gifts of a bag full of such articles as needles and thread, soap, and yes—lipstick for each woman. Some were crying softly—all seemed surprised to receive a gift and delighted with the stockings for their children. "After the women," reported Katherine, "more men. It seemed a never ending mass movement of humanity. Actually it was about 1,716 people—255 women and children and about 21 infants—the youngest around four months."

Although she speaks French and some German, Mrs. Mills found that the sign language worked very well for her in the stormy crossing to America. Playing with the children in their staterooms, she conveyed her ideas by means of gestures. It was hard to pry mothers loose from the old-fashioned nursing bottles they gave their babies. In fact, they were doctored in New York before they began to accept the sterilized bottles provided by the Red Cross. The ship's doctor worried that state-ford hoarded by the Hungarians might cause an epidemic. He ordered it tossed overboard. This was slowly complied with at first since the refugees could not believe that they were to have three meals daily. At first some of the men went through the chow lines five times daily. They were de-

HE Group To Meet On Monday

Home economics graduates who are now homemakers in the Salem area will meet Monday, January 21, at 8 p.m. at the home of Mrs. Maynard Nelson, 1153 North 25th street in Salem.

Miss Murie Seales, state extension agent from Corvallis, will be guest speaker at the meeting. She will speak on "Behind the Scene of New York's Fashion Industry."

Miss Seales has just returned from a year of study at the Traphagan School of Fashion in New York. Until recently she was clothing specialist with the state extension department.

The Salem group of home economists in homemaking was organized last year and officers were elected at the November meeting. Mrs. Paul G. Trueblood is president of the club. The group is affiliated with the Oregon Home Economics association and American Home Economics association. Any graduate of home economics is invited to attend the meetings, which are to be held 3 times a year.

Co-hostesses for the January 21 meeting are Mrs. Nelson, Mrs. Phil Brogan and Mrs. William Zenger.

lighted with their gift bags of toilet articles. Undershirts were in great demand since everyone wanted to be clean.

A Red Cross worker from New York was kept busy answering questions of the men in Hungarian. "How much can I make an hour in America? . . . What will it buy?"

Hungarian folk songs filled the ship. Quickly assembled was an orchestra of piano, bass viol, violin, and drums. Mrs. Mills described the Hungarian anthem as stirring beyond belief. She met a young Hungarian artist for whom she found paper, brushes, and a few boxes of children's paints. "Our crossing was so stormy I don't believe he ever got to work."

For a brief interval she had a shopping tour of Bremerhaven's open markets. Here she saw candy, toys and potted spring tulips and hyacinths.

She has nothing but praise for the General Haan and its crew. The ship had been OHS (on reserve status) for two years. On the way over to Bremerhaven it was completely repainted and spruced. In her day by day diary she described the Haan thus:

"Much as it rolls and twists and pitches—she feels as though she has an arrow right through her very center that keeps heading straight ahead. And those engines have never missed a beat."

Mrs. Mills is the wife of Abbot L. Mills, Jr., a member of the board of governors of the Federal Reserve System. The couple has an 18th century home in that section of Washington known as Old Georgetown. Here their children, grandchildren, and many friends from all over Oregon often visit.
