Outgoing Finance Head Urges Car Pool at Portland

Citing economy of operation in the state motor pool here, Robert R. Johnson, outgoing state finance and administration director, has recommended similar action be taken in Portland.

Johnson left the finance department Saturday to take a post with the League of Oregon Cities.

In recommending establishment of the motor pool in Portland, Johnson told of the reduction of operating state cars here since the plan was instituted.

He explained that per-mile operating cost of passenger vehicles in the state pool is less than four and a half cents. The figure, he said, is one cent less than the average cost of state car operation outside the pool and two and a half cents less than the amount paid for the state private cars used for state business.

Johnson noted that the number of cars used by participating state agencies here has been reduced from 88 in October, 1954, when the Salem pool was organized, to 51. Despite fewer cars, the pool serves more state employees than formerly and has reduced the mileage of private cars driven for state use.

The car pool has made a profit of $49,401 on operation in the past 27 months despite a reduction in charge to each agency using the pool from six cents a mile to four and a half cents.

Johnson said the Portland pool, if inaugurated, would increase efficiency by making the existing vehicles available to all potential users and would effect reduction in or the elimination of certain costs. These he listed as operating costs, storage charges, cost of home-to-office use, fixed charges through possible reduction in the size of the fleet, cost of private car mileage and the cost of man hours now devoted to automotive care and record keeping within the various agencies.

The retiring finance director said a full report on pool operation and state automotive management practices is being readied for the governor and legislature.

In leaving office Johnson praised the work of William F. Gaarenstroom, services division administrator, and Fred H. Hoyer, automotive management supervisor.
