

DOROTHY DIX COLUMN

You're Only 13 Young Lady, Let Your Parents Help You

By DOROTHY DIX

DEAR DOROTHY DIX: I met a boy at a party. He's 23, and though I'm only 13 he said he would come visit me some time. I know my folks will slaughter me if he calls. I don't care for him, and would like to know how I can prevent the visit.—Worried.

DEAR WORRIED: A 13-year-old can't be expected to handle all sorts of situations—that's one reason why you have parents. If you tell Mom and Dad about your problem, you'll find them cooperative. I'm sure they'll help you out, instead of slaughtering you.

When the boy calls, he should be told, quite nicely, of course, that the folks restrict dating to your own age group.

DEAR DOROTHY DIX: Stan and I have been going together for two years, and while he talks of love, a vague future, and a distant engagement, he has never come right down to the point of asking me to marry him. He says he has to be positively sure before he takes that big step. Don't you think two years is enough time?—Colleen.

DEAR COLLEEN: When the young man begins making excuses, it's time for the young lady to find another beau. Even if the excuse-finder could be dragged to the altar, he'd make a very unreliable husband.

DEAR DOROTHY DIX: I am in love with a married man. He was free when I met him, but had already promised the girl to marry her, and didn't know how to get out of it. When he told me of the impending wedding, he said he planned to get a divorce as soon as possible. I know they never lived together as man and wife. I've continued going with him, but now his wife won't give him a divorce.—Clarice.

DEAR CLARICE: At 22 a girl should have outgrown fairy tales. Your friend's story is impure fabrication from first to last. As long as you believe it, however, you'll go with him, and will only wake up when some other young fool takes him over.

DEAR DOROTHY DIX: Jack and I dated all through high school, and then he enlisted. He had quite a time, here and abroad, and admitted to several affairs. I was so disgusted and disappointed that I married someone else. I have a splendid husband, but unfortunately I still love Jack, who is now married to someone else. We've seen each other a few times and there is no doubt for either of us that we love each other. I want to be fair to my husband, myself and my baby, but I want love, too.—Donna.

DEAR DONNA: For the happiness of everyone concerned, especially yourself, stick with your husband.

Romance is a wonderful thing, in its proper place. What you call romance, however, would bring you no peace or happiness. Stop seeing Jack. It will hurt for a while, but the reward will be more than adequate.
