Steelworkers Give McDonald Big Vote Edge

Opponent for Union's Helm to Contest Balloting

PITTSBURGH (UP)— David J. McDonald held a big margin to-day in returns from Tuesday's election for president of the 1.2 million-member United Steelwork-million-member United Steelworkers Union.

There appeared no doubt he would defeat his only opponent. Donald C. Rarick, a rank and file steelworker with hardly any organization behind him, and win relection to another four-year term. The big questions, still unanswered, were the effects on Medonald's position in the American labor picture and on the USW itself resulting from the union's first contested presidential election. A good sized vote for Rarick would be embarrassing for McDonald.

Donald.

Returns from some 500 of the union's 2,700 loca's gave McDonald 97,405 votes and Rarick 20,526. McDonald led in all sections of the country.

Rarick discounted the results as announced by USW district head-quarters. He said district officers were nearly all McDonald men and described some of their claims of big McDonald margins as "fantastic."

He cited as an example the figures announced by Joseph Germano, director of District 31 in the Chicago area. Germano remano, director of District 31 in the Chicago area. Germano reported McDonald leading by a margin of better than 30 to 1.

"Why, we have more committee people working there than the votes he credits us," Rarick said. Rarick said he would contest the balloting at Local 1299, Detroit, which reported 3,300 votes for McDonald and 833 for him. He said the local's executive board—"all McDonald men"— tabulated the the local's executive board—ain McDonald men"—tabulated the votes and allowed no one from the Rarick camp to be present.

He said he knew "without a shadow of a doubt" that Pittsburgh and its surrounding area "will be terrifically for us."
