Senator Smith Joins Protests Of Gas Boosts

Hopes Congress Probes Will Head Off New Increases

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Margaret Chase Smith (R-Maine) joined other senators today in protesting recent increases in gasoline and oil prices.

Mrs. Smith arranged to testify at a joint investigation by Senate Antitrust and Public Lands subcommittees into operation of the emergency oil lift to Europe and domestic price increases that followed its inauguration.

In advance of her testimony, Mrs. Smith said she hopes parallel Senate and House investigations "can find some way at least of preventing another increase in oil prices."

"We have had many protests in New England," she said.

Senators O'Mahoney (D-Wyo), Kefauver (D-Tenn) and Carroll (D-Colo) have been urging that some agreement to hold or roll back prices be made part of the government-sponsored emergency oil lift.

Under the program, the major oil firms have been granted immunity from antitrust prosecution in pooling their tankers and other facilities to supply oil to Europe. Mideast oil sources have been cut off by closure of the Suez Canal and pipelines.

Victor R. Hansen, chief of the Justice Department's Antitrust Division, told the Senate group yesterday the department is keeping a close check on the program and is prepared to end it if the companies are found to be "misusing" their special privileges.

At one point, O'Mahoney said rates have "skyrocketed" in tanker hauling of the emergency oil. Hansen said he understands some tanker owners "are making a million dollars a trip" carrying oil to Europe from the Middle East via the long route around Africa. Hansen told a newsman he didn't know whether the million dollars covered the oil or was profit.

On the domestic price question, Hansen said it would be illegal and unwise to try to fix prices under the program.

He promised the oil companies would be prosecuted if the Justice Department finds the recent price hikes resulted from collusion, conspiracy or other methods banned by antitrust laws.

BUSINESS MIRROR

Europe Giving Birth To a Customs Union

By SAM DAWSON

NEW YORK (AP) — With great labor pains Europe is giving birth at last to a customs union. In time this is expected to make doing business in its member countries much like doing business in the United States.

The U.S. Constitution forbids the individual states erecting tariff barriers against each other.

The common market which six European nations are forging will mean in time that goods produced in Germany, say, can be sold in Italy without any markup in price due to a tariff.

The six nations are France, Italy, West Germany, Netherlands, Belgium and Luxembourg. In time they will set up a combined system of tariffs against the goods of other nations, including the United States, outside the customs union. The six, however, assure Washington the barriers won't be high enough to be discriminatory.

But manufacturers in the six nations would have an advantage over those outside the common market, to the extent that tariffs would raise the selling price of the goods produced outside.

Britain isn't ready yet to join the customs union but is working hard for a 17-nation free trade area. It hopes that a draft of the plan will be ready by midsummer. This area would include the six nations in the common market and also Austria, Britain, Denmark, Greece, Ireland, Iceland, Norway, Portugal, Sweden, Switzerland and Turkey.

Manufacturers in these 17 nations would have the competitive advantage of no tariff barriers there against their own goods (except possibly agricultural products)—and presumably some protection against the competition of American and other outside manufacturers.

The chief difference between a customs union, such as is now being formed, and a free trade area, which may follow is this: A customs union sets up a combined system of tariffs against those outside the union. The free trade area, while abolishing such barriers against goods of its own members, leaves the member nations free to work out their own tariff schedules against all other nations.

Since admittedly this will take several years to effect, the impact on U.S. manufacturers will be delayed. But in time, many here fear, the impact will be considerable.

Wall Street

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market continued a mild decline late Thursday afternoon in slow pre-holiday trading.

Volume was estimated at around 1,600,000 shares compared with 1,790,000 Wednesday.

Some special issues made wide price movements but the general range was confined to a point or so.

Doubt over the Middle East situation combined with normal hesitation before a long weekend depressed buying interest. All domestic stock exchanges will be closed Friday for Washington's birthday.
