On Tuesday, March 12, the Portland Symphony orchestra, under Theodore Bloomfield, returns to Salem for its third and last concert of the season, under the sponsorship of the Salem Symphony society.

Carrying on its tradition of preserving a variety of music, the orchestra will play three very different compositions. Opening the program will be Rossini's Overture, "L'Italiana in Algeri."

Feature piece of the evening will follow, with the premiere performance in Salem of Bela Bartok's "Concerto for Orchestra." Written near the close of his career, this concerto is considered to be one of his mellowest works, though it may surprise those hearing it for the first time. Born in Hungary in 1881, Bartok died in New York in 1945. Salem Symphony society deems it a privilege to hear Mr. Bloomfield lead his orchestra in this very modern and challenging music.

A public lecture on Bartok and his music is scheduled before the concert and time and place will be announced later.

Traditionalists will welcome the closing music of the evening, Brahms' Third Symphony.

Tickets are available at Stevens & Son Jewelers, 290 State St. Concert time March 12 is 8:15 p.m. The program to be in Willamette university music auditorium.
