

Salem Council Gives Okay to Amusement Park Water Service

Company Plans to Put in Line to Property

Members of the city council Monday approved providing water service to the Paradise Island Amusement park, now being constructed outside of the city limits.

Present city policy is to sell city water to business and schools outside of the city but not to residences.

The amusement park company will put in a water line to the entire distance from the present main to its property, City Manager Kent Mathewson said. The firm will also request an easement across city property at the airport, he explained.

Other Water Action
In other action concerning water, the council approved providing water on four acres of land outside city limits, owned by the Reimann Real Estate company.

The city manager was authorized to negotiate with the real estate firm regarding the replacement of the line, which presently would serve the area.

Swim Pools Remodelling Gets Airing

How to finance remodelling or complete rebuilding of the Leslie and Olinger swimming pools was one of the chief topics of discussion Tuesday afternoon when representatives of the city and of the school system meet at the administration building.

With both the municipality and the school board facing the prospect of expanding budgets and some uneasiness on the part of the taxpayers the financial issue looms large.

The pool issue was brought to a head recently when the state board of health indicated it would condemn both places if some action was not taken immediately.

Several new weed chemicals are now available for both selective and non-selective use, though all have certain characteristics requiring special application procedures.

Commission to Consider Sanitation and Street Plan

The Salem City Planning commission, meeting at 7:30 Tuesday night at the city hall, will consider a number of matters, including a suggestion from County Engineer John Anderson that the commission adopt a uniform plan involving sanitation and street construction within a six-mile radius from Salem.

The engineer asks that housing developments outside of the city limits be required to have county health department soil inspections and county engineering supervision of road construction.

The commission will consider a variance setback request by Precision Builders, Inc., which would permit construction of a five-unit court apartment at the southwest corner of Simpson and 21st streets.

A petition by Francis Smith for re-zoning from R-2 to C-2 business of the half block south of Mill creek on the east side of North Church street will be considered. Other business on the agenda includes the application of Cornelius Lofgren for a setback modification at the rear of property at 235 Alice St.; the application of Jake and Emma Lowen for vacation of unused portions of Margaret and Primrose streets, West Salem; and a petition for a zone change that would permit expansion of Westwood Products, 500 S. 21st St.

Fines Levied Against 3 Men For Illegal Venison Possession

Fines ranging from $50 to $200 were levied on three men after they pleaded guilty in district court Monday to charges of illegal possession of venison.

Alvin Joseph Mazac, Jr., who gave his address as 2610 Wallace Rd., was fined $200 while Dale E. Collier, 1105 North Liberty St., was fined $100 and Harvey Deren (Red) Weisman, 3800 Portland Rd., was fined $50.
