Forest Service Reseeds Burns

DALLAS (Special)—Winter time is planting season on Black Rock Tree Farm.

When domestic gardeners are sifting comfortable at home, reading seed catalogs, C. S. "Sam" Smith and his Willamette Valley Lumber Company planting crews are reaching the peak of their yearly work schedule.

Smith supervises several crews of planters who climb the steep terrain of the Black Rock country, hand planting Douglas Fir seedlings.

Terrain Sleep

The sharply angled terrain makes planting a difficult chore. As Smith says with a grin "Most of the boys have one leg shorter than the other, so's they can move up a hill fast."

Planting operations are centered in sections where all salvage logging has been completed.

The crews are delivered to planting sites by trucks. Their equipment is simple, mattocks, canvas planting haversacks and a load of two year old seedlings.

They trees are packed into sacks which are attached to the planter's belt and worn on the left side of the thigh. Planters travel to the bottom of section slated for planting and work up the hillside. Particularly difficult slopes often require a half day's work for a crew of six to eight men.

When planting, the worker opens ground with his mattock, inserts a small seedling and tamps the soil down firmly around the tree. He then proceeds a few more feet and goes through the same process.

When the hilltop is reached, crews take a lunch or rest break and follow the same process throughout the day.

Bright red and yellow flags are posted on the hillside to mark planting boundaries.

Standard tries a flood of fire to make worn out oil fields produce again

Progress in the West means... Helping find new sources of oil to supply the 13 million barrels per day the U.S. will need in 1966

1956	8,827,000 barrels per day	1966	13,000,000 barrels per day
------	---------------------------	------	----------------------------

MANY INACTIVE WELLS STILL HAVE LOTS OF OIL left underground in spite of the industry's great advances in oil recovery. Our country must have this oil to meet the growing power needs of industry, the Armed Forces and motorists. That's why Standard is trying a new conservation experiment called "fire flooding."

We ignite some of the oil in a pool... control burning by regulating the air supply. Heat and pressure drive the oil to surrounding wells for pumping. It will take more than a year's time and a million dollars to see if fire flooding works. We think it's worth the effort because it could add more to U.S. underground oil reserves than the discovery of an entire new oil field.

Standard's petroleum engineers say, "Back in 1925 the industry could predict only about 20% recovery from a new field. Modern secondary recovery methods, of which fire flooding is one of the latest, could more than double recovery... so important in meeting a constantly rising need for more oil."
