Fish Committee Approves Bill

Passage of a bill calling for an international agreement to prohibit gillnetting of salmon in certain Pacific Ocean areas was recommended Friday by the House Fish and Game Committee.

The agreement would embrace Oregon, Washington, California and Canada. However, it would not become effective until the other states and Canada adopted similar legislation.

Committee members admitted the bill provides only stop-gap legislation, but they said the federal government has warned that it will initiate some action if the states do not act.

Commercial fishing interests agreed some legislation is needed to prevent illegal fishing in offshore coastal waters.

Charles Henne, spokesman for the fishermen's union, said the bill should be expanded to ban all types of fishing gear, including traps.

Education Unit Debates School Book Problem

Removal of state standards as a requirement for distribution of free textbooks to private and parochial schools was debated Friday afternoon by the senate education committee.

Requesting the change in Senate Bill 162, were Catholic schools represented by Leo Smith, Portland attorney for the Catholic Diocese of Portland.

Smith said that 80 per cent of the Catholic schools cannot obtain textbooks because they have classes with enrollments in excess of state standards.

Smith also said that textbooks are furnished public schools even though some classes in the system had enrollments in excess of 30 students.

Sen. Monroe Sweetland (D), Milwaukie, said the committee had received many letters objecting to lifting the standards for textbooks, on the other hand he expressed sympathy for the problems faced by the private schools, caused by increased population and hoped some solution could be found.

Hyde Speaks To Realtors

Honesty and integrity on the part of persons engaged in selling real property were stressed during an address by Clarence F. Hyde, state real estate commissioner Friday noon to members of the Salem Board of Realtors.

Coupled with the commissioner's suggestion along ethical lines, were numerous instances where real estate brokers had been found lax in their dealings with sellers and buyers.

"Brokers owe it to their client, and to the seller, to take logical steps in chronological order from the inception of a deal until its conclusion," said Hyde. In this connection, the commissioner said rules and regulations governing real estate transactions should be followed since members of the real estate profession are the ones who dictate them.

Speaking of his appointment to the office, Hyde said that for years he had had a desire to become real estate commissioner and when Gov. Holmes offered him the post he jumped at it without inquiring as to the salary.

The House passed and sent to the Senate Friday legislation that would enable a civil service commission to order re-instatement of dismissed employees. Fourteen members dissented.

Rep. Keith Skelton (D), Eugene, said it would let dismissed employees have legal counsel at hearings for re-instatement. Under the present system, he said, a department head is not compelled to re-hire despite a commission recommendation.

Skelton said existing conditions "are wide open to political hirings and firings."

484 STATE ST. - SALEM, ORE.

The other day we visited a furniture factory in a nearby city and were amazed at the deep concentration shown in the intent faces which were bent over skillful probing fingers of the workers. . . . In our store we had been thrilled to show this beautiful line of hard maple furniture. It bears one of the leading names in the industry and commands respect wherever it is shown.

Here is born the beautiful line of top table we have mentioned in this column on occasion, as well as our sturdy captain's chairs, cobbler's benches, coffee tables, lamp tables with the simple detailing of yesterday, and many other pieces. From here, too, come the finely detailed poster beds, the book-case-type headboards with sliding panels revealing minutely turned railing, our beautiful chest on chest bedside tables to match, as well as other fine bedroom pieces. . . . The owner, in his gracious manner, had explained the many processes through which the wood must go before it becomes a finished piece, but one remark came to us with respect for this explained the happy character written not only on his own face but on the faces of the workers busy at their tasks. He said, "After all, only good furniture has a heart in it. We would welcome your visit to our studio and would consider it a real pleasure to show you these fine pieces. . . . Let's decorate a family room together with some of these maple furnishings. We'll begin by framing the large bay window at the end and across the room from the fireplace wall in knotty pine to match a 300" wainscot of the same wood around the room. On the floor we'll lay our "hit and miss" patterned wool carpeting of blue and red on creamy beige. The wall areas above the wainscoting could be papered in the ship's paper from our new "Seaport Collection." This shows actual diagrams from which the famous schooner "The Morgan" was built, with a 24" printing in blues and browns on an aged cream background, of the old ship herself. . . . Draperies of the same ship print on fabric could be hung under a pine cornice board around the bay. In this bay we'll place our beautiful plank-top, drop-leaf table which would be most effective against the window background in which we'll show a collection of blue glass. For a table centerpiece we could use a ship's model, filled with greens from the garden. On the long wall we'll place a royal blue sofa, tossing one red cushion upon it and flanking it with our simply-designed end tables which could hold bronze lamps with red shades. In front of the sofa our cobbler's bench coffee table would be excellent. . . . Now, in front of the pine paneled fireplace let's use two small maple chairs with ruffled-edged seats and backs upholstered in our quaint little blue and red print. . . . On the long wall opposite the sofa grouping we'll place our lovely marble chest and the sturdy captain's chairs with red cushions on the seats. A hurricane lamp and a bronzed bowl filled with fruits would give an added touch here. . . . Now let's flick the switch that lights the fluorescent tubes behind the fine ceiling cove and see a soft warmth gently steal across our family room.

Be till later. EM
