Official Says PORTLAND (UP) — The president of the Oregon Education Association said here yesterday that educators of the state have not lost sight of the child they are educating and people who believe otherwise have misinterpretated the educator's point of view. Marion Winslow of Coos Bay made the statement in reply to an address made earlier before the OEA convention here by Gov. In St. Louis made the statement in reply to an address made earlier before the OEA convention here by Gov. Robert Holmes. The governor had said the educators are in danger of becoming known as tax experts and accountants rather than educators by their actions.

"We in administration are constantly faced with the problem of translating the educational program into tax dollars. There is a close relationship between the finds we have and the kind of educational program we can put too,." Winslow said.

He added: "Maybe we haven't been able to get across to the Legislature that when we talk about dollars we are talking about education and children."

In direct reference to the governor's address, Winslow said. "If it's a means of backsliding, of preparing to tell us they're not going to do what they promised to do, then we're very disappointed."
