

DOROTHY DIX COLUMN

Disagreeable Filing Clerk Standard in Most Offices

DEAR DOROTHY DIX: There are three girls in my department. Two of us get along fine; the third is uncooperative, disagreeable, can't see a joke and leaves most of the work to us. We hate this friction. What can we do?—Desperate File Clerks.

DEAR D.F.C.: Feminine office help, of any kind, is so much in demand today that it's unnecessary for you to contend with such disagreeable conditions. Go to night school, study stenography and be in a position to get a job at the top of the heap. Meanwhile, exercise patience. This is a quality that won't be taught at night school; it must be learned from experience.

Your future will include disagreeable as well as pleasant people. A mature adult can deal with both. The unamiable co-worker is adding to your education—but don't imitate her. Maybe you can even reform her. If conditions become intolerable before you're ready for advancement, there's always the Help-Wanted section.

DEAR DOROTHY DIX: Last week I was invited to a party by a boy in my class. Mom said she didn't approve of him calling for me. She said I should meet him on the outside, or at the party. I think my folks should know the boys I go with. Don't you?—Uncertain.

DEAR UNCERTAIN: You're right, and your mother, I regret to say, is quite wrong. Either she's been misinformed about dating etiquette, or she doesn't want strangers in the house. It's her responsibility to meet, and pass on, any boys you date.

DEAR DOROTHY DIX: My husband of six years had always been devoted. His attentiveness lasted through four months of my pregnancy, then suddenly stopped. He said there was no other woman, but there certainly was a cooling-off toward me.

When the baby was three months old, he packed up and left. He went home to mother, who has always ruled our roost. She and I have never gotten along. He's been with her six months now, comes to see us frequently, supports us adequately but, despite my urging, refuses to come home. How can I induce him to come back?—Marta.

DEAR MARTA: Mamma, apparently, can out-urge you. Since entreaties accomplish nothing, stop them. Welcome him on his visits home, be cheerful, attractive, show off the baby, then bid him goodbye, as if his going didn't mean a thing.

He'll be intrigued, then curious, and finally may be interested enough to return—for good.

Newer Model Arms in Korea Talked by U.S.

By WILLIAM GALBRAITH United Press Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON (UP)—The United States is planning to put newer-model weapons in Korea to partly offset a reported Communist military buildup in North Korea, American officials disclosed today.

The action will be taken under a liberal new interpretation of the 1953 armistice which ended the Korean fighting. There is no intention of declaring the armistice void despite repeated evidence of Communist violations.

Some highly-placed persons have suggested that the United States and its fighting partners in Korea declare the 1953 armistice agreement dead because of the Communist infractions.

Action Ruled Out Secretary of State John Foster Dulles earlier this week ruled out such action on the ground it might lead to new fighting in Korea. But he said the Reds have committed "rather serious violations" and this may "give us greater freedom of action in the respects in which it has been violated."

Officials said Dulles meant greater freedom under an article of the armistice providing for maintenance of the "balance of forces" in Korea. The article ruled out introduction of new weapons except to replace worn-out material and said replacements must be of the "same effectiveness and the same type."

Claims Firepower Up The United States claims, however, that the Communists have increased their firepower—primarily by sending into North Korea an estimated 400 to 700 jet and propeller-driven planes in violation of the armistice.

U.S. officials also argue that in many cases it is almost impossible to replace same equipment with items of the "same effectiveness and the same type"

American planners are not too worried. They believe this country, South Korea and the other nations still keeping forces in Korea could repel any Red attack.
