Washington Notes . . .

—By Lillian Porter Say

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 9 (Special) — Among guests at the Cherry Blossom-Show luncheon during the National Cherry Blossom Festival was Mrs. Collis P. Moore of Moro, Oregon's Republican national committeewoman.

"It was the first time I had seen a bride's dress modelled first. Usually that is the last number," she commented.

The show opened with a pretty model dressed in a cherry blossom pink wedding dress designed by Emma Domb. Then it gave a fashion flash back to how the bride got her man, beginning with a patio party, moving to lunch, a cocktail party, and finally a party, which gave opportunity for modelling of evening gowns. Most expensive dress was a black and white cut-out organdy by Maxwell Sheffield, costing around $80. The rest of the lace which ran from eyelet, lace, linen and silks could be purchased for under $18.

As more and more charming numbers appeared, a newspaper columnist remarked, "Why do women go to Paris for their clothes when they can buy models like this at home?"

"Sh-sh," said another, "you'll have the French ambassador slitting his throat."

Following the show, Mrs. Moore didn't linger to make a glamorous selection. "I have to get back to Oregon," she said. "My husband's plowing and I always put up his lunches."

Other Oregon women here for the Republican Women's conference included Mrs. Claud Nasburg and Mrs. Walter Spring of Coos Bay. The latter is visiting her career daughters in New York before flying home. They are Cathryn and June Damon. Cathryn is the leading ballerina in the new musical comedy, "Shin Bone Alley," and June is studying voice in New York.

Also seeing New York for the first time is Maryhurst College sophomore, Shannon Reichford. The daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Frank Reichford of Olympia, Shannon was the only Young Republican from Oregon at the conference. A major in sociology at Maryhurst, Shannon has decided to work in Washington after her graduation. "Before I saw our Capital," she said, "I thought it would be stuffy and unfriendly but since arriving I've found it to be the friendliest, most exciting place I've ever known."
