DOROTHY DIX COLUMN

Her Steady's School Hero And It's Turned His Head

DEAR DOROTHY DIX: Stevie and I were going steady. We had our first quarrel last week. He played the lead in our class play, and was such a success that the girls have been swarming around him ever since. He pays less and less attention to me. How can I recapture his interest?—Selma. DEAR SELMA: Play along with the crowd, dear. Don't show your jealousy; be as appreciative of his talents as the other girls. His sudden popularity will die as a new here takes the spoilight. Then a slightly chastened Stevie will be quite content with his old steady.

DEAR DOROTHY DIX: I've always been a sociable, fun-loving person, with plenty of friends both male and female. My husband understands my disposition. Recently we met a new couple After seeing them at a few parties, the man got me aside and asked me not to speak to him in front of his wife, as she's the jealous type. Personally, I think she has a right to be. I don't like his attitude, in fact, I'm afraid of him.

in fact, I'm afraid of him. DEAR DIANNE: What you intend as good fellowship might easily be misinterpreted as filiring by those not in the know. Temper your manner, especially with new people, until you know the wife is not In the case of your new friends, don't approach the wife directly, but turn a group conversation to the question of your manner. If everyone agrees that your disposition is outgoing rather than preda-tory, she should be reassured.

DEAR DOROTHY DIX: Our class prom is coming up soon. Several weeks ago I asked a boy to go. He said he'd be delighted, but he might not be able to get off from work. Naturally I wanted everything settled, so when I didn't hear from him I called again. His mother took the message and said she'd have him call back. He never has, I don't want to make a pest of myself but would like to he sure of an escort. Can I call any more?—Dierdre.

DEAR DIERDRE: Since you've had no sucess phoning the boy, try writing him a note. Explain that you'd like to have an answer by a specific date—to give you live had an anguler hay if he can't make specific date-to give you time to ask another boy if he can't make PITTSBURGH (# — A Michigan educator cautioned today that in "launching into a talent search" America runs the risk of "downgrading the normal individual."

G. Robert Koopman, associate superintendent of public instruction in Michigan, sald in a prepared speech:

"The present emphasis on finding talent . . . on highly equipped laboratories and teachers for 1 percent of the school program, while the other 99 per cent suffers, represents a malady.

"Such loose talk is dangerous in a free society . . . perilous from a national defense point of view when we need citizenship education and trained and loyal manpower so sorely."

Koopman, on the convention program of the International Council for Exceptional Children, said that "to glibly throw people about in terms of fractions of populations and degrees of handicaps is especial work in a "lush environment" of opportunity.)
