

Many Women Try, Few Win Hungary Dash

By PETER HOFFER

VIENNA (AP)—The wives of refugees already in the West are risking their lives, and sometimes their children's, by trying to flee across the heavily guarded Hungarian border to Austria.

The Iron Curtain—a barrier of barbed wire fences and mines—is rising again on Hungary's western frontier. Many women are making a last-minute, desperate dash to freedom. Only a few succeed each week.

One who succeeded is Ilona Martas, a hairdresser from Budapest. At 32 this pretty, slim woman is turning grey. Sitting with her arm around her 37-year-old husband Lajos, Ilona shivers as she tells her story:

"I first tried to get away in January, but was stopped by the Communist border guards and sent back to Budapest with a rubber stamp in my identity card, saying that I was a would-be escapee. I knew that I would be picked up by the AVO (secret police) sooner or later and with that mark in my identification papers I would be finished.

"Finally I could stand the fear of being arrested no longer. I disguised myself as an old peasant woman and traveled by train to a station near the Austrian border. Each time there were security checks. I went into the ladies' room.

"A farmer helped me. At night he put me on his cart and drove me to a place about 10 miles from the Austrian border. He showed me in which direction to go.

"When you see a neon glow you are in Austria," he said. I walked on alone.

"I stumbled through the pitch darkness. Sometimes I fell into holes and ditches. Twice I had to cross a river of icy water and nearly drowned."

Mrs. Martas was found unconscious on a street of the Austrian border village Deutschkreuz. She is now in a refugee camp awaiting emigration to any country that will take her and her husband, a barber.

GETAWAY BOAT

DALLAS (UPI)—Recent floods have made it necessary for most Texans to adapt themselves to changed conditions. This includes thieves. Tuesday, a gunman escaped from a Dallas supermarket with $1,300 in cash. He drove away in a yellow truck, pulling a boat and trailer.
