

● A first

Elmer Quinn agreed that discipline on the bus is absolutely necessary to the lives of the other students on the bus. He suggested the paddle (the "board of education") he saw in John Trujillo's office might be a solution. "It worked on me" he said jokingly.

The question of separate schools was also brought up. Dr. Bowers said that the school was there to teach kids how to get along in a "white man's world", if he wants to. "We can teach him the tricks of the trade so he'll be able to survive in the competitive white man's world."

He said that 509-J can't teach a child how to get along on the reservation. "That's up to the parents." He added that he's not tactful, but that he cares about the future of the Indian kids and the school.

Juanita Bourland spoke up and said that perhaps she had misunderstood what he had just said. She pointed out that on the Warm Springs Reservation, the job market is very competitive.

She said that there is a need for highly qualified, well educated individuals to take over management positions, professional positions, and highly technical jobs requiring very competitive and well trained personnel.

Bowers agreed that it was indeed, one world. Several members of the school board appeared to be thinking about what Mrs. Bourland had said.

Rita Squiemphen asked what the function of the school board is. "Does it have a job description," she asked. Bowers answered that basically, the school board is a policy-making body, it presents the budget, hires and fires personnel, sees that State and Federal laws are followed, and approves purchases.

The school budget was discussed, and questions were raised as to what is being done since the defeat of the budget. Bowers said that an advisory committee has been appointed to mull the situation and make recommendations to the school board. The new budget will be presented June 29th.

Elmer Quinn, when asked what he thought should be done, said, "Let's up the budget." "Warm Springs needs four new class rooms, now," he said. He said that the situation regarding class rooms in Warm Springs is extremely crowded and something will have to be done soon.

Bowers said that the tribes, the school, the student, and the home all have a shared responsibility. "We all live in one world," he said, "so let's get together and share the responsibility of raising our kids."

It appeared that, on both sides, the main concern was for the sake of the children. Generally, though there was some skepticism, it was felt that this was at least a beginning, and that perhaps a little less hostility was present.

Other meetings of this kind, to open and establish lines of communication, are planned between the Tribal Council and the school board. There seemed to be a general agreement that this will be very important - for the sake of the kids.

Student Programs Funded

STILLWATER, Okla. — The William Randolph Hearst Foundation of San Francisco and the Bureau of Indian Affairs have given $25,000 each to Oklahoma State University's School of Technology to assist in establishing a new program for American Indians, Dr. Ken Anderson, project director, announced this week.

BIA funding was contributed by the Oklahoma offices at Anadarko and Muskogee, where each committed $12,500.

The program, to begin with the 1976 summer session, is aimed at providing a four-year education in any of 10 different fields of engineering technology for 25 Indian students per year, Dr. James Bose, OSU School of Technology director, said.

"It will be the first of its type in the country," Anderson said. "We have been working on getting this project established for more than a year and eventually hope to make it nationwide."

When fully implemented, the plan calls for the students to spend eight weeks at OSU between their high school graduation and first full freshman semester becoming acclimated to the university community and receiving a general introduction to technology.

Once it is fully funded, the program will provide scholarships to cover the participants' room, board, books and tuition during the school year.

In succeeding summers between regular semesters the students will work off campus at various industries getting on the job experience in their future career fields.

New technology graduates, Adnerson points out, are now averaging more than $12,000 a year in salary on their first job after graduation and that trained technologists are currently in heavy demand by industry.

OSU's school offers degrees in aeronautical, electrical, power, electronics, construction management, fire protection and safety, mechanical power mechanical design, petroleum, radiation and nuclear and general technologies.

The program will be governed by an advisory council consisting of Indian leaders in Oklahoma who will advise the faculty on policy matters. Students from anywhere in the United States are eligible to apply.

Some vacancies for participation this summer still exist. Those interested should contact Anderson at 215 Crutchfield Hall, School of Technology, OSU, Stillwater, 74074.

Fire season now open

Closed fire season went into effect throughout a wide area Monday, bringing into effect special fire regulations.

Fire tools, extinguishers and watchman service will be required in all logging operations and other forest operations, burning permits will be required for all open burning in the districts and smoking is banned while working in forest operations.

Areas affected by the fire closure ruling are the West Central Oregon District, Mt.

Hood National Forest, Deschutes National Forest, Ochoco National Forest, Walker Range Forest Patrol

Association and Bureau of Land Management Prineville District.

The Bureau of Land Management has resumed its telephone recorded forest and range fire information report. The latest information on wildfires on national resource land in Oregon, Washington and adjoining states is available by dialing the Portland number 234-2324.

The automatic system operates 24 hours daily and the message will be updated, as required, to provide information on the current fire situation, fire weather forecasts and information on areas closed to recreational use because of fire hazard.

Callers may also leave a recorded message asking for specific details. The call will be returned as soon as possible.

To The Editor:

Dear Mr. Miller:

I enjoyed the opportunity to talk with you about your paper at Warm Springs. My very best wishes to you and the tribe.

Sincerely yours,
Martin Schedler
