Fort Hall Reservation Closed To Non-Indians

The Business Council of the Shooshone-Bannock tribes of the Fort Hall Reservation in Idaho has closed the reservation to non-Indians "until such time as Congress consents to the criminal jurisdiction of the Fort Hall Tribal Court over non-

Indians on the reservation.

The council issued the statement following the Supreme Court Oliphant decision ruling that Indian tribes do not have criminal jurisdiction over non-Indians who commit crimes on reservations. The council said it regretted having to put the ban into effect, but that residents and property on the reservation had to be protected.

All permits for hunting and fishing have been revoked by the Council of the 534,000-acre reservation. And, although all federal highways remain open to traffic, tribal roads and off-road areas are closed to non-Indians.

The bottoms area of the Snake River on the reservation has been used extensively in the past by non-Indians for hunting and fishing. "It's the best recreational land around here," said Mark Trahan, editor of Sho-Ban News in Fort Hall.

Trahan said that most of the people have been understanding about the situation, but that some of the sportsmen are upset. As far as tribal members are concerned, Trahan said that "they have never been unanimous on anything." Some agree and some disagree with the closure.

Tourist trade is not of great importance on the Fort Hall Reservation, according to Trahan, but there has been some loss of revenue which is being tolerated, he said.

According to Trahan, the Council plans to enforce the closure until the Tribal Court gains criminal jurisdiction over non-Indians. Their tribal attorney is working on the case, now. Until then, non-Indians will be cited for trespass if caught on the reservation uninvited.

Marine Board Meeting To Address Metolius

The Confederated Tribes' request to establish a 10 mph speed limit on the Metolius Arm of Lake Billy Chinook will be one item on the agenda of an upcoming State Marine Board meeting to be held in Madras.

The public is invited to attend the regular bi-monthly meeting of the Marine Board which is scheduled for May 31 and June 1 at the United Methodist Fellowship Hall, 12th and B Streets.

Other topics on the agenda will be a request by the Sunriver Anglers Club to limit speed or ban powerboats on the Deschutes River between Wickiup Dam and Benham Falls; a proposal to ban commercial tour boats on the Upper Rogue River; and a proposed administrative Rule to establish boating controls on Lost Creek Lake in Jackson County.

The Marine Board meeting will open at 1 p.m. May 31 and continue the following day at 8:30 a.m.

New Pipes Being Flushed, Tested

Forty-thousand feet of new pipe in the Simnasho-Schoolie water system are being pressure tested and flushed in preparation for hook-ups, said Don Rohde of Tenneson Engineering.

Households in the drought-affected rural area should be getting a steady supply of Beaver Creek water by the end of June, Rohde said.

Since Tuesday or Wednesday of last week, water has been pumped from wells into the mains to flush dirt out of the six-inch PVC pipes and to point out possible leaks or weak points in the system. When the testing and any repairs are completed, the water will be chlorinated, the metal reservoirs painted, sandblasted and the system will be ready for operation.

Engineers will bring the water as far as individuals' surface boxes and the condition of pipe from there to the dwellings is the responsibility of owners.

There may be as much as $40,000 left over at the end of the project, according to Rohde, and although it is up to the Tribal Council how the balance will be spent, Rohde sees the possibility of extending the system beyond its southernmost point in the direction of Kah-Nee-Ta.

The system as it exists now includes a new well, pump station and treatment facility at Beaver Creek, two 100,000-gallon reservoirs - one at Simnasho and the other a mile and a half east of the cemetery, and a booster pump between the tanks.

Estimated cost of the system, which has been under construction since October, was $720,000. Years of talk turned to action when funds were approved by popular referendum last September, freeing the Council to accept a low interest loan and grant of equal size from the Economic Development Administration.

A more plentiful and consistent supply of water is expected to draw people back to re-settle the Simnasho-Schoolie area. Residents of the community are currently working with the Tribal Planning Department and Land Use Committee to direct that growth.

Extras Needed For TV Series

A photo (casting) session for the television series, "How the West Was Won," with James Arness, will be held in the Campus Area across from the old Agency Building on May 22, at 10 a.m. o'clock. Those auditioning should be dressed in Indian Regalia or native costumes if available.

Filming for this series will begin Monday, June 12 at Bend and will be shown after January of next year (1979).

Thirty-two people will be needed as extras and will be paid $30 per day. Lunch will be served on the set and bus service will be provided to and from the set. It is imperative that the people who try out be in good physical condition as the setting is in the 1840's.

Of those 32 people, the company will need: six Indian children, ages 3-9; six young Indian men, ages 18-30; five Indian men, ages 50-70; eight Indian women, 20-45 years old;

five Indian women over 45; and two people with mixed Indian and non-Indian ancestry.

Local casting director, Carol Bryant, will be at the Community Center to screen the applicants and have pictures taken of them. She will then show the director who will make the final decision.

Carol Bryant works out of Bend, and isn't new at this type of work. Carol had done "Kodiak," a few years ago with Clint Walker, which had several local people in that TV series. Among them were Andrew David, Wilson Wewa, Wilfred Jim and his family, and the Spinoffs. Carol had also done "Trouble River," a children's movie which also had a few locals.

The main plot is centered around a French Canadian who is part Indian. The law is trying to bring him back to justice but he fights for his rights. James Arness believes in him and lets him go free.
