HUD sued by contractor

much as Dana has claimed, said Yaw.

As the project neared completion, a disagreement arose over the water system in the senior citizens complex, making it impossible for anyone to occupy the homes. Yaw said that the contractor refused to make the necessary changes to bring the system in line with project specifications.

With regard to inspections, Yaw referred to letters from Dana that complained of inspection to the point of harrassment and other letters complaining of too few inspections.

The daily record kept by local housing officials throughout the duration of the HUD construction project should prove valuable in preparing a defense, said Yaw. Answers to the complaints are due within 20 days of the date the papers were served on the defendants.

Tribal attorneys, who have been advising local housing officials on the matter for the last year, were not available for comment.

HUD's attorney Harold Stephens said he has serious doubts as to whether the Warm Springs Housing Authority can even be brought to federal court.

Montee resigns

Branch Manager Rudy Clements that he in turn presented to Council. One, dated July 17, described in some detail the proposed "realignment" of police department staff, to have been implemented August 1. The second, dated September 8, was a follow-up justification for the realignment.

The Law and Order Committee has sent two or three memos to Tribal Council expressing its concern about the future of the police department, said committeeman George Clements. No reply was received.

Clements, who spent eight years with the police department, pointed to signifcant improvements in the department since Montee became assistant chief, including better communication with patrolmen. He fears that when Montee goes, others will follow suit. "They liked him," he said.

But he admits that the community is split over Montee. "Dick is probably the most qualified police officer we have," said Clements, "but a lot of people feel an Indian should have the job."

Beyond Montee, Clements is concerned about the fate of the assistant chief position, which he feels is justified. "The job was created to better the police department ... If someone takes the bull by the horns, he can change the department, but he has to look at the top level, not at the patrolmen."

Clements is also worried about the juvenile program, which lost a good man in Small Fire Hawk. Council deleted a juvenile officer and a proposed juvenile narcotics officer from the 1979 budget bcause they could see "no results in 1978 so staff in 1979 are not justified." Council is advocating increased cooperation with the existing drug program, juvenile probation and regular police officers.

On January 24, Tribal Council is due to make a final decision on all budget items held in abeyance. For the police department that means the fate of two patrolmen, one dispatcher and one Kah-Nee-Ta security position. It is not known whether the deleted positions will be reconsidered.
