Bobb sentenced to probation

Myrna Bobb, 30, convicted of involuntary manslaughter in the death of her adoptive infant daughter last April, was sentenced September 20 to five years probation.

Federal District Court Judge James M. Burns handed down the sentence after hearing testimony from psychiatrists and psychologists. Bobb a tribal member, could have received as much as three years in prison and $1,000 in fines but the lighter sentence was recommended by both prosecution and defense.

According to U.S. Attorney Bill Youngman, there was agreement in court that Bobb would probably not repeat the behavior that resulted in the death of Cheryl Tia Bobb, 21 months. It would be better, recommended psychologists, for the mother to stay with her family than to be incarcerated.

One condition of the probation is that Bobb receive mental health assistance, said Youngman.

Bobb was convicted in July after pleading guilty in U.S. District Court, at which time the judge termed her behavior "disciplining without malice." An autopsy revealed that the child died of inflicted head injuries. Experts claimed in court this week that the circumstances leading to the death were unique and that a repeat incident was not likely.
