

Here's your big chance

Your favorite color photograph of Oregon may be worth $1,500—that is, if you're the lucky winner in Pacific Northwest Bell's third telephone directory cover photo competition.

Entries will be accepted by mail at the telephone company's Portland office from April 1 to June 16.

"Anyone who lives or works in PNB territory, including company employees, is eligible to compete," according to PNB Oregon Vice President Larry Wolfard. The contest winner will be announced August 24, 1981.

Previous contest winners were Chuck Forinash of Newport for a picture of the Yaquina Head lighthouse on the coast, and Bruce Johnson of Redmond for a scene of the snow-covered South Sister and Broken Top peaks near Bend. Entry forms, with complete explanations of how photographs will be judged and how to enter, have been sent to PNB Phone Center Stores as well as to camera shops and clubs and to photography associations and professional photographers throughout Oregon.

PNB recommends that entrants send duplicates of their entries, not originals, for the initial judging. Original transparencies or negatives will be requested from the 25 semi-finalists.

Based on technical reproductions considerations, that field will be narrowed to 10 finalists. A panel of outside experts will then determine the winner.

The winning photograph will appear on the front of PNB's 1981-82 Oregon directories and reach an estimated 2.2 million people across the state.

Official entry blanks and contest rules are also on hand at the Spilyay Tymoo office.
