

Local artists rewarded with sense of accomplishment

Leroy Colfax is one of many talented artists in Warm Springs. He has done illustrations for educational books on the Yakima reservation as well as original portraits. Some of his caricatures can be seen at the Warm Springs Information Center.

A corner near the fire is set aside in Maxine Switzer's house where she can comfortably do beadwork. She's busy now working on projects for Christmas.

Cornhusk bag-making is an art at which Isabelle Keo is an expert. She's been doing it a long time, she says. Her mother taught her.

Jewelry made by Harry Miller is in demand. His work goes out to buyers in Portland and is also sold locally at the Information Center. In his travels he makes many contacts and at the same time acts as P.R. man for the Warm Springs reservation.

God's Eye wallhangings adorn many homes. Many of them are made by Jeanette Yazzie. Besides wall-hangings Jeanette dabbles in the art of beadwork, also.

Spilyay Tymoo photos

by

Marsha Shewczyk