

Greatest Native American hero joins police department

Warm Springs' justice department recently contracted the services of this anonymous young man to enforce trespassing violations along bordering waterways, near east Cascade summits and in the forests. Unfortunately, he can fly only when wearing this special "swim suit," so winter is a difficult time for him. Now that warmer weather is approaching he will be putting in longer, more regular hours.

During an exclusive interview, he admitted that he is still perfecting his newly-acquired flying skills and that he occasionally "misses his landing taret by several hours." By summer, during the height of the trespassing season, he feels he will be ready. He still refuses to reveal his identity, saying it's best that way. Since payroll doesn't know his name or Social Security number he is paid by the mile, also on an anonymous basis.

New sport invented here

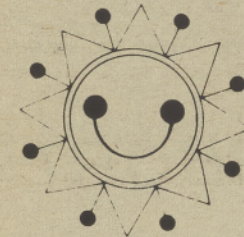

Team Karate Ball, a new sport invented here at Warm Springs, combines techniques of wrestling, Karate, Judo and basketball. It is anticipated that the new sport will counteract height advantages of opposing teams, particularly because of the short growing season in Central Oregon. To make the game even more fun, the ball is approximately the size of a large golf ball, or small baseball. It's soft though, somewhat like a sponge.

Tribal Council purchases new van

Warm Springs Tribal Council recently purchased this new van for transportation on the reservation. The open-air vehicle will enable Council members to view sites without difficulty. The council members who traveled to The Dalles to pick up the van were each given cigars as a token gift for their purchase. Cost of the van has not been disclosed, but it is said to have cost about $74,000. Spilyay Tymoos photo by Bare-end and Millionaire

Notes From the—

The highlight of a recent basketball tourney occurred when the two referees could not come to an agreement on who to call the crucial foul. One ref said, "This is my ball, my team and my tournament, if I say the opposing team member is guilty of the infraction, so be it." The other referee was equally adamant.

While the two refs were trying to settle their dispute, the two captains of the opposing teams broke out in a violent argument and scuffle as one accused the other of cheating in their game of Jacks while waiting for the two refs to settle their difference. It appeared that one of the captains said the other should have still been on onesies while the other said he was on twosies. The first captain was trying in vain to take the jacks from the other while the other team members stood by.

Beep, Beep, Beep

With approximately 270 das 'til Christmas, things are going on sale at a rapid pace. One of the greatest specials this year is a book entitled, "1000 ways to out do the Jones's on the Next Christmas Shopping Excursion".

The Tribal judge is having one rough time on who to sentence for a murder charge. The evidence presented to the court revealed where several cases of dead bottles were found lying around but the guilty party is still under investigation according to the chief investigator for this incident. All cases were found empty. For a while it was believed that SWAT might have to be brought in as sometimes a good swat really does the trick.

Meanwhile several local members were forming a committee to meet with the

Mt. St. Helens Update

The latest reports are that Mt. St. Helens is resting quietly with no serious effects to the public. Sight seers are once again welcome to visit the volcano dome. There are reports received by the local police department that Jefferson was steaming, rumbling and just about ready to blow in wild rages, it seems as though in packing for his visit to Kah-Nee-Ta, Mr. Jefferson had apparently neglected to bring along his swim trunks. "Beep, Beep, Beep."
