

Trip to Hawaii fulfills dreams for Simnasho students

A visit to the Polynesian Culture Center gave visitors an opportunity to share some of the south sea islands' culture. Here Mona Meanus demonstrates a Tahitian dance after a little instruction.

Unlike Oregon, the ocean water around the Hawaiian islands is an aqua-marine color and very warm. Simnasho visitors were warned of being too adventurous in the tides.

Young Hawaiian students at Blanche Pope Elementary School were awed at having Indian students performing for them. It was a new experience for them, as well as for the Simnasho students.

Trees to climb in are a little different on the island of Oahu than they are in Warm Springs. Joshua Currey tries it out.

Flowers grow abundantly on the island. They are pretty adorning one's hair as well as being beautiful on the many trees and bushes on the island. Charlie's Tailfeathers pins a bright flower in Nancy Tailfeathers hair.

The first performance by Simnasho students took place at the Ilikai Hotel in Honolulu. They were well received.

Aloha! (Welcome and goodbye.) Lorena Bil is glad to be home after a week away from home. All of the Simnasho troupe brought Hawaiian leis back to give to their awaiting families.
