term personal goal, "to represent the Warm Springs Tribes not just as an individual of the tribe but as Native American."

Lenora is a young lady of many interests and she has received many awards for her scholastic and athletic abilities. She graduated from Madras High School where she was active in basketball, volleyball, track, the school newspaper as a reporter, Future Homemakers of America, Indian Club, Quill and Scroll and American Field Service. Her many interests and activities have led Lenora into many hobbies and special interests. She enjoys beadwork, photography, darkroom work, writing, powwows and traveling. Pride in her heritage and culture as a Warm Springs Native American were addressed by the young miss during the competition for Miss Warm Springs with her talent presentation of the legend, "Eagle Boy and the Stick Game Monster" and her speech in which she spoke of her tribe and the traditional ways of food gathering.

The pageant held in December marked the 10th anniversary for Miss Warm Springs Pageant. Three Warm Springs girls vied for the crown and title. Those young ladies were Lenora, Carroll Johnson and Vesta Johnson.

Carroll Johnson, a student at Mt. Hood Community College, was selected as first runner-up for Miss Warm Springs 1983. As runner-up Carroll will stand in for any event or duty that Lenora may not be able to attend.

Ending her reign as Miss Warm Springs 1982, Lyda Scott's final duty was to place the crown on Lenora. Lyda had postponed her college plans after she had received a title and crown last year. Lyda will be attending a college in the Southwest this year.
