Indian News Notes

SMITH VISITS CHOCTAW AND CHEROKEE RESERVATIONS; PRAISES TRIBAL GOVERNMENTS:

After a day-long tour of the Mississippi Choctaw reservation, Interior Assistant Secretary Ken Smith told the tribal council that he was impressed with the tribe's economic development achievements. "You have few natural resources," Smith said, "but you have taken your greatest resource—your people—and built a thriving land that provides jobs for your people."

Smith, accompanied by the BIA's eastern area director, Harry Rainbolt, visited the Chata Development Company, a tribal construction firm; a wire harness manufacturing plant which has contracts with General Motors and just recently doubled its capacity; and an American Greetings Card plant, the latest private sector, joint-venture involvement of the tribe. Together, the three firms employ more than 500 people, most of them Choctaw Indians.

Smith also spent a day on the Eastern Cherokee reservation in North Carolina. There he examined the school, visited the Cherokee Boys Club which operates a variety of business ventures and saw the many tourism developments on the reservation. Smith told the tribal council there that their reservation illustrated what can be done when a strong, stable tribal government works together for the good of the people.

PRESIDENT SIGNS SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATION BILL; INCLUDES $53 MILLION FOR BIA:

The 1983 supplemental appropriation bill signed by President Reagan recently this week includes $53,150,000 for the Bureau of Indian Affairs. The act provides $14 million for fire suppression; $6 million for contract support indirect costs; $1,650,000 for litigation support and $150,000 for attorney fees in water rights cases; $9,350,000 to upgrade BIA village schools transferred to the Alaska state school system; and $22 million to upgrade or replace the Mount Edgecumbe School, Sitka, Alaska.

The Mount Edgecumbe $22 million will be provided to the state only if it agrees to assume operation of the school facility. The BIA closed up the school on June 30, 1983.

The money to be provided to Alaska for the village schools is to be used only for rehabilitation or reconstruction of the schools—not for basic operation and maintenance.

The act also provided that the BIA could transfer other funds to contract support during the fourth quarter of the year, if those funds to contract support during the fourth quarter of the year, if those funds are not required for the purpose for which the original appropriation was made.

REVISION OF THE JOHNSON-O'MALLEY (JOM) DISTRIBUTION FORMULA BEING CONSIDERED:

A committee appointed by the BIA's acting director of Indian education programs met August 8-10 in Washington D.C. to initiate the process for revising the distribution formula for Johnson-O'Malley Act funds.

The JOM funds are used for special programs for Indian students attending public schools and other non-federal schools. The process for revising the formula is contained in Public Law 95-561, section 1102. Any changes must ultimately be approved by the majority vote of the Indian tribes and Alaska Native villages.

The committee appointed, consists of William Demmert, a former director of the BIA's education programs now with the University of Alaska; Jon Wade, president of the Institute of American Indian Arts; Terry Walters, education specialist at the BIA's Winnebago agency in Nebraska; William Leap, an education specialist with the National Congress of American Indians; and Myron Jones, a consultant from Albuquerque, New Mexico.

The committee will review the present formula, develop alternate options and publish them in the Federal Register for review and comment.

After considering the comments received, the committee will publish a selection of formulas for vote by the tribes and villages. If one formula would not receive a majority of the votes, a runoff election would be held. Each tribe and each Alaska Native village has one vote, regardless of population, under the existing law. No change in formula would take effect prior to the 1984-85 school year.
