

Graduates embark on new life

One hundred and twenty-four students were honored at graduation ceremonies held May 31 at Madras High School. The young men and women sat among hundreds of friends and relatives during an hour long program.

The heat of the day made the gymnasium look alive as graduates and audience fanned themselves in the 101 degree temperature. Many graduates wore shorts and cooler clothing under robes rather than traditional dresses and slacks.

After the processional of graduates an invocation was presented by Father Leo F. Weckerle. The Madras High choir then sang, followed by a student address by both Penny Berman/Smith and Aurel Surface.

Guest speaker Terence O'Donnell, a researcher and writer for the Oregon Historical Society, encouraged graduates to begin immediately on achieving their goals. He stressed that happiness and feeling good about oneself was an important accompaniment to working for self-set goals.

A special ceremony preceded presentation of diplomas to the 1986 graduating class. Roscoe Links had been student body president of Madras High school in 1916. He had left school to help his father on the farm while many of his classmates joined the military that year. He never graduated.

Because life is a teacher, school board members felt 91 year old Links had learned lessons deserving a high school diploma. As he sat through the remainder of the ceremony, Links read his newly acquired diploma word by word.

Students, then, received their diplomas, each showing the seriousness of the event, and each beaming with pride.

Andy Lucas sang the Lord's Prayer and Loren Suppah and Minnie Johnson prayed before the audience in sign language as a conclusion to the program.

The Madras High school band played as the graduates left the gymnasium, no longer seniors, commencing on their new lives as adults.

Self-managers given special privileges

Self-managers are students who are responsible and are able to work and play without teacher supervision. Throughout the school-year students who were able to achieve the level of self-managers were given special privileges including field trips and activities.

Students could lose their self-manager status but were given an opportunity to regain it within a week. Many students retained their self-manager position throughout the year.
