Itchishkiin (We speak)

To the People,

We apologize for not writing this letter in the last few issues. Tribal Council has been on a busy schedule with the tribal budget, federal legislation, and the many other subjects coming before the table.

The tribal budget for 1987 has been posted. We spent about 17 days reviewing the proposed expenses in September. It is important to understand that the final action of the Tribal Council will not happen until after the public hearing. We will be interested in your comments and will take these into consideration when we appropriate tribal dollars. At this time the proposed budget is about a 2 percent increase over the 1986 amount.

As the 99th Congress came to a close, we were able to gain ground on several issues. The new law on the relicensing of hydroelectric projects protects our opportunity to compete for the license on the standing exists between the Tribe dams. The budgets for the B.I.A. and the Interior Department. and I.H.S. were approved in amounts gan administration. The budgets include forestry, education, and health care.

Also in Congress, a large bill to combat drugs was approved with consideration for Indian communities. Youth programs for drug education and prevention are included in this bill. The bill also authorizes tribal action plans to be developed.

The Columbia River Gorge Protection Act was also approved which has provisions to safeguard both tribal lands and allotments that are located within the boundaries of the designated area. Also, sufficient funds were made available to carry out the needed work under the U.S.-Canada fishing treaty by participating tribes.

The Tribal Council also met with the federal team of people from the Interior Department who will be working on the water rights negotiations. We feel that a good under-

509-J proposes tax base

A figure of $3.6 million has been determined by the 509-J school board as the amount of a tax base election to be included on the November 4 ballot.

Although voters recently approved a $3,229,175 levy the election is required by law in even year elections for districts which do not have an established tax base.

The advantage of a tax base for the district, explains 509-J assistant superintendent Phil Riley, would be the assurance that "school doors would not have to be locked." With a tax base a six percent increase is allowed each year. Any increase above that would require voter approval.

concert wrote names and words in wet cement that had been poured for a sidewalk on F Street next to Oscar's Sporting Goods store in Madras.

A parent who had seen students at the site called Madras Jr. High school and suggested that principal Dick Junge and vice-principal Amy Diaz-Barr view the sidewalk. Police were notified because the damaged involved public property and a report was filed. The estimated replacement cost was set at $525.

Students who participated in the destructive activity received disciplinary action at school. The students are deterred from attending athletic and social events through participate in an athletic sport he or she may go to those games but may not attend any other games. Athletes involved in the incident were taken off teams for the remainder of the current season.

Information regarding the vandalism was turned over to the Jefferson County Juvenile Department. A representative of the department explained that an informal dispositional agreement will be made between parent, child and a representative of the juvenile department regarding payment for damages and punishment.

The proposed zoning and land use ordinance, Chapter 411, was presented to tribal members in Warm Springs, October 13 and to tribal members in Simnasho October 16. The ordinance will supercede the present ordinance, Ordinance No. 56, following a review by the people and gaining their input.

A third meeting will be scheduled for the Seekseequa district's input and review in November.

At each meeting an overview was presented by Tribal planner Ray Rangila. He briefly discussed a proposed Agency road project. which will create a new road for access from the Agency area onto highway 26. The purpose of the code was explained to the participants, which will be to ensure orderly development while also enhancing protection and preservation of the reservation lands.

The reservation will be divided into six primary zones; all will be exclusive of each other and all zoned land will be included in one of the primary zones. Those zones are: 1. forest zone, 2. range, 3. agriculture, 4. wilderness, 5. community and 6. special protected areas.

Overlaying zones will be established, which means zones can overlay into more than one of the primary zones. The overlaying zones would be: 1. recreational and scenic, tact Mona Jim at (503) 553-1322 or rural housing, 3. fish and wildlife, 4. water, 5. traditional, cultural and historical and 6. mineral and energy. An example of an overlaying zone in primary zones would be Trout Lake. It is in the forest zone but it could be classified as a recreational scenie overlaying zone; fish and wildlife; water; and traditional. Following the presentation by Rangila the people in attendance were broken into small groups to make recommendations and identify questions for specific areas. With each group, a facilitator was assigned to record comments of participants and give a briefing on reactions, questions and comments. Five groups were formed with each group taking a topic. Topics discussed were: I. rural housing and range/agriculture, 2. special protected areas, 3. assignments and allotments, 4. land use code and 5.

community areas. Some of the comments and questions: Is it a good idea to consolidate fractional interests of allottees to give 100 percent ownership of smaller parcel? Most people agreed it would be in the best interest of the tribe and people involved in the long run. Also asked was the questions of returning an assignment, that had been abandoned or unimproved, to the tribe as provided in the constitution. Again the agreement was strongly in favor of the

The rural housing and range/agriculture group expressed the idea that people should build homes in rural areas if they were willing to bear the expense and responsibility while considering just what the impact would be on the area. The group also suggested that the code be written in a simplified language so it could be easily understood by

On the issue of land code reaction, the group felt that land use and zoning controls are needed. The elders expressed that they enjoyed living in rural areas and that they should be kept that way without a lot of commercial development. Younger people thought homes. The elders suggested that more zoning should be made for with too much planning the com-commercial uses. The issue of special protected areas drew many comments from the people. Elders expressed that many areas on the reservation at this time do not produce the traditional foods, such as root area, that many years ago was productive and now is barren of roots. It was suggested that perhaps these areas needed to be restored and set off limits to other interests such as logging. One spoke of the Log Springs area that years ago was the site of a special root which grew in great abundance but today that root is gone. It was thought the root disappeared following the logging of that area. Areas that are for food gathering should receive special protection.

It was stated that without the land, the people would be lost. Elders reflected that today many people do not follow the traditions. An example was that widows and mothers who have lost a child ignore the teaching that they should not gather traditional foods. These are the ways of the people at Warm Springs and perhaps it is time to return to the teachings.

It was felt that a special law should be passed to prohibit the selling of traditional foods such as roots, salmon and berries, and items like the eagle feathers. Instead they should be bartered or traded for. People felt it was like selling the tradition and that was wrong.

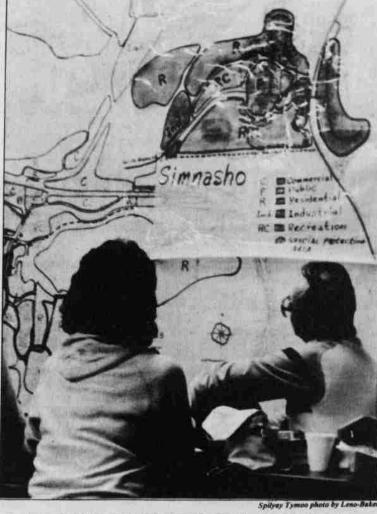

Community areas raised the question should communities at Warm

The elders expressed again the idea Springs, Simnasho and Kah-Nee-Ta need zoning for various land uses and, if so, just what kind of land uses should be provided in those communities? Some felt a great need for more land in commercial zoning so that people could have land to start businesses and that the present small rural communities would best serve the people and the land. Further meetings will be held with recommendations given to Tribal Council on the feelings of the enrolled members on the concerns and comments about the Zoning and Land Use Ordinance, Chapter 411.
