

Dental implants not a panacea

by Dr. Michael Bell

Recently, there has been a great deal of information being provided to the public regarding Dental Implants. Over the last couple of weeks, I've had a number of individuals ask me about implants and if that would be the right treatment for them. There appears to be a great deal of confusion regarding this type of treatment. First of all, dental implants are not a panacea for all people and their dental problems. Most individuals who are candidates for these various treatment approaches, usually are missing a large number of teeth. Most are already into full or partial dentures.

Approximately forty million Americans are edentulous (missing all their teeth). Half of those people have difficulty functioning with dentures. With increased longevity and consumer awareness, more patients will seek viable solutions to denture discomfort through implants. Implants are a viable option, but one should remember that with the benefits there are always associated some potential complications. The questions you are probably asking yourself, do these benefits possibly outweigh the risks.

- Some of these benefits include:
- A. Restoration of the patients' facial appearances.
 - B. Restoration of the patients' ability to chew and speak properly.
 - C. Elimination of direct forces on the gums which reduces the potential for possible gum boils.
 - D. Improved placement and stability of the appliance, which increases the patients' confidence and self-esteem.

Some of the possible complications

- include:
 - A. Improper selection of the patient who can or cannot be good candidates for surgery.
 - B. Improper design of the appliance to be used.
 - C. Infection.
 - D. Rejection of the implant.
- Patients selected should be in general good health, possess healthy gums and should have adequate bone to support the implant. Many people are unaware that one of the primary considerations in the success and longevity of the implant, is for a meticulous daily routine of cleaning by careful brushing. Without proper home care, infection will begin and the possibility for rejection of the implant increases. Another consideration is length of post surgical time. Often these cases can take as long as six to eight months for healing and determination of the success of the implant. Costs can be extremely high, based on the type of implants and the type of appliance fitted to that implant.

Another important point is the definition of success. Many practitioners feel that success of the implant is based on the length of time that the implant stays in place. Three to five years is considered a very successful treatment for that patient, for the most part, many of the patients will out live their implants by many years.

Recent strides in implant dentistry have moved implantology from the realm of "last resort" to that of a positive treatment alternative. This reawakening has been fostered by documented evidence that implants can succeed if extreme care is taken in selecting the proper patient, one who can be a good candidate.

If your interest lie in this area, then you should contact your family General Practitioner or visit a local Oral Surgeon. Remember, implants are not for everyone, but for some it can be a viable alternative.

IRS offers information on deductions

This year, 1986, is the last in which taxpayers who do not itemize deductions may deduct charitable contributions. In 1987, only taxpayers who itemize will be able to deduct charitable contributions.

You may deduct contributions to non-profit agencies such as religious, charitable, educational and civic organizations. You may also deduct the value of used clothing or other such property you have donated.

You cannot deduct the value of services you perform for a charitable organization. But you can claim a deduction for out-of-pocket expenses incurred while performing volunteer services for religious, charitable, educational and civic organizations.

Deductible expenses must relate solely to the performance of the service and must not be for the personal benefit of the taxpayer.

If you are claiming charitable deductions it is important to keep records of all contributions and expenses.

For more information about deducting charitable contributions, see IRS Publication 526, available from local IRS offices. Or call the toll-free number listed in the phone book under Internal Revenue Service.
