In a baseball game between the Thrifty Drugs and the Braves on the Papoose field, the Thrifty Drugs won the game 10-11 in a close game.

Rat Pack nips Fire and Safety team

It was a battle between the big brothers, that's if you are two or three years old, as the "T" ballers battled evenly until the last bat where the Rat Pack was able to come from behind to nip the Fire and Safety 6-5. It was a squeaker for the Rat Pack who now lead the league with only one loss for the year.

The little guys played some heads up ball for their ages and size. Sometimes its hard to tell whos on each team especially when they put on those batting helmets. You can tell they are trying their very best as when they hit the ball and take off as fast as their legs can carry them, they mean business and are trying to win the game. Even with the little equipment some of them appear as though all they can do is lift the bat. It was surprising to see them field the ball on catching fly balls and picking up those grounders. By doing this shows that there will be some good ball players in the near future.

So far the Rat Pack lost only one game and just managing to edge out the Fire and Safety at a crucial time. Coach Big Rat said that these two teams were out to beat one another, they were all fired up. The Fire and Safety coached by Danny Martinez showed some promise as the whole team is experiencing first contact with the game and a lot of their losses were by just one point. So for little as they are they do pretty well.

In the "T" ball game, a Fire and Safety batter makes ready to belt one out in the field. The Rat Pack won the game, 6-5.

Chinmoy lifts "wings of steel"

Known mostly for his stupendous efforts throughout the globe for world peace, spiritual master Sri Chinmoy has rested his vision on new vistas in the world of weightlifting. He recently lifted over 7,000 pounds—with one arm.

That's right! While still capable of "bringing down peace to make others fly," Chinmoy has added almost 4,000 pounds of "steel wings" to lift an astonishing 7,000 pounds of metal from his 3,081 pound lift in January.

In only 19 months of training, Chinmoy has leaped from lifting a mere 40-pound dumbbell to lifting 7,000 pound "wings of steel". However, these are not wings of mere human strength, says Chinmoy.

"I wish to tell the world that the other world—the world of spirit—does exist," says Chinmoy. "You see, my physique is nothing in comparison to a body builder. It proves that the inner spiritual or psychic power can be brought forward to be of great assistance to the body. Peace does not always remain inside. My weightlifting is showing the strength of peace. I am not competing with anybody. I'm only trying to inspire others to show what inner peace can do. Everything has it. . .only it has to be brought forward." Chinmoy concluded, saying "The credit for the feat of strength must go to God."

Although his background lies in spiritual discipline, Chinmoy's intense practice of inner meditation since the age of 13 has led to his incredible capacity for embodying spiritual light and power. It is only through sheer spiritual power, Chinmoy says, that such a feat could ever be delivered. Now human strength could supply it.

Chinmoy applies this same light-force when helping mankind in the struggle and search for peace. He currently holds directorship for peace meditations at the United Nations, U.S. Congress and the British Parliament.

According to the British Amateur Weightlifting Association registrar of records Jim Smith, "As far as I know, that's the greatest weight anyone has ever held overhead with one arm or two. I don't think anybody can fully appreciate the ability and capacity of this man. Sri Chinmoy is truly the eighth wonder of the world."

Chinmoy has also lifted an elephant, an airplane, a sailboat, a helicopter, a small house and cars and trucks using a modified calf raise machine.

Chinmoy is drawing upon inner resources by using concentrative power—willpower. Thereby, through tapping these sources and bringing them forward, he has enabled himself to become the prize winning guru with uplifting spiritual power.

Jason Smith team the Worlds Champions in the wildhorse for the past two years have been doing very good for themselves so far this year. Rain came at the closing performance cooling down what was a hot afternoon as the show ended with plenty of mud, causing some of the timed events to slow down considerably because of bad footing.
