

Pi-Ume-Sha keeps community busy

Tony Suppah tolerated the heat Sunday in the traditional dance finals.

Dancers exhibited their expertise during the Pi-Ume-Sha powwow. Attendance was down bit from last year, but that didn't seem to dull the spirit of the weekend.

Disillusioning opponents during a game by flashing the bones in an animated fashion is the way to do it during a stickgame.

A young spectator kept an eye out on the stickgame tournament. The baby was completely satisfied with the tournament action and didn't fuss a bit.

Spilyay Tymoo
photos by Marsha Shewczyk
and Donna Behrend

Spectators tried to beat the heat in any way possible, including popping up large umbrellas. Soda sales were brisk during the powwow.

The "Unknown Dancer", complete with paper bag, showed his stuff during a "honky" dance. The dancer had previously been singled out as a non-Indian, but in fact, was an Indian.