Exercise improves life

For Stan Kneeland, exercise helps him feel better about himself, gives him a better outlook on life and helps him to cope with everyday problems. He recommends exercise for everyone. He was selected as the male exerciser for the month of May.

Stan started exercising seriously about 18 months ago. His goals at the time were to get into better physical shape, to build body strength and to train for distance running. His running abilities are well known to many of the distance runners in Central Oregon area. He entered the annual mini-marathon Kah-Nee-Ta and the Reservation Relay held last month. At the mini-marathon he placed second in the overall run and the team he ran with during the relay took first.

He said that he exercises at least six to eight hours per week, averaging 30 to 50 miles in running. He also does muscle stretching, jogging, aerobics and cycling.

His goals are to break three hours in the Portland Marathon held in September and to qualify to run in the Boston Marathon.

One of his exercising stumbling blocks is not always having a baby sitter during the day, when he would most like to exercise. He finds that if he runs at 2 a.m., that particular block is smoothed. He prefers to exercise with others but that is not always possible. He went on to say he and his family share biking, hiking, camping and shopping for ways to exercise.

He recommends that people "do themselves a favor and get into some type of exercise program." It could help to overcome many bad habits that could be hazardous to their health. He knows his life has been extended by a few years and those years he plans to spend with his family. He said the birth of his daughter gave him a desire to live and spend time with her.

May female exerciser of the month Eloise Thornton will be featured next issue.
