

Transportation—Getting us nowhere not so fast

Mired down and no place to go but out, horse power was probably often used to "unstuck" a vehicle.

Transportation in the "good ol' days" came in various shapes and sizes. From a stylish convertible to a mule-powered wagon train, these photos from MOIHS show those differences. What an adventure travel must have been!

All dressed up and raring to go, these gentlemen toured The Dalles in style.

Historical photos by Sid Miller

Ready for some Boraxo, this wagon and team headed across the flats.

It's a good thing construction of roads no longer depends on this type of equipment.

The front truck carried the "Dynamo" that was shipped from Neofit in 1927.