"Spilyay Speaks"

The summer is at a fast pace and waiting for no one and it will soon be Autumn. The students are winding up their summer employment and looking toward another school year.

The hallways around the organization will soon be quiet after the summer programs are all closed, where these past few weeks were busy with the hustle and bustle of students doing errands and other jobs which kept the hallways busy. To some departments it was a big help to have the youngsters on hand to do the leg work. A lot of jobs gives the students a chance to see just how each department functions. This helps some to decide on a career in certain areas while it also gives the students a chance to see the negative side of jobs that appear to be all peaches and cream until one is directly involved on the job.

There are those students who have enough insight of the job situation and still have several years before they strike out on their own...and at the present time they choose the outdoor jobs rather than to be cooped up in a office at such a young age. They feel being outdoors at this time is better and when they get older and are ready to enter college, that's when they will become serious of a career job during the summer months.

Almost every department had at least one student working, some offices and departments had several, especially the grounds crew and the outdoor recreation jobs had several students on the job. The summer recreation jobs keeps the students on their toes most of the time because they supervise summer recreation activities for the kids at the Community Center, for swimming and other outdoor activities like hiking, rafting and other activities that need constant supervision over the younger children.

The next step for all the students is school shopping where they will take all their savings and get ready for that opening day at school, while all the departments who have employed these students will be back to normal again.

Spencer family says thank you

The parents of Joshua Spencer (Piumesha burn victim) would like to express their deepest, heartfelt appreciation to the caring community of Warm Springs.

The cards and letters sent to Joshua make his days more bearable. He looks forward to each letter and card he receives and at times has his mother read them over and over to him.

At the time of this writing, he was in between surgeries (he was awaiting his fifth one). Each day Joshua has made some progress, he is able to walk further and not on his tippy toes, and to stand straighter than the day before. He is a very courageous boy.

The prayers can be felt by all in his room, so he knows that a lot of people are praying for him (them). The loving support that was given was greatly appreciated.

Since the accident, Joshua and parents have found out they have a lot of relatives from Warm Springs. His grandmother on his dad's side was Cynthia Switzler.

So again, many, many, thanks to all of you that shared our concern, prayed for our strength and the recovery of Joshua and helped out in any and every way.

Tonasket takes IHS job in Portland

Several hundred friends attended a farewell luncheon for Mel Tonasket, former chairman of the 14-member governing entity of the Colville Confederated Tribes on July 13, his last official day as a member of the Colville Business Council.

Tonasket, 49, retired from the Tribal Council after serving 19 consecutive years as a council member representing the Omak District of the Colville Indian Reservation. Tonasket will move to Portland this month where he has accepted a permanent position for the Indian Health Service's Portland Area Office as a Public Affairs Specialist to the area director.

He left office after completing the first year of his tenth two-year term, creating an open position on the council for a representative from the Omak District. During the Colville Business Council's final fiscal year 1988-89 meeting, Tonasket bid farewell to his fellow council members, leaving behind a legacy of outstanding leadership for his own Colville Indian people and as a national spokesman for the rights of all American Indians.

Eddie Palmanteer, Jr. was selected by the council to fill the position vacated by Tonasket after he received the most votes from a group of Omak District tribal members.
