The past two weeks' weather was not available. However, it has been cold and foggy!

Gathering data chilly job
Warm Springs tribal biologist Mark Fritsch and John Ogan from the Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife brave the cold while they collect data. By taking an inventory of native fall chinook carcasses tagged earlier in the year at Sherar's Falls, biologists are able to make population estimates.

Census Bureau sets up regional office in Bend

The U.S. Census Bureau is getting ready for the Big Count in 1990 with the opening of a district office in Bend. There will be a total of five district offices in the state, located in Portland, Salem, Eugene, Bend and Beaverton.

The Bend census office is located at 1155 S.W. Division St.

Approximately 100 persons will be employed at the district office, which will be the nerve center for census activities in an eighteen county area. Hiring for approximately 600 field census jobs throughout the district will begin in January.

Throughout the state, the Census Bureau will recruit and hire enough people to fill some 3,400 temporary census positions, with an economic contribution to the state of $10 million.

The effort to achieve a complete and accurate count of the state's residents is of critical importance to Oregon and to each community.

The impact of the 1990 Census on the state and the nation will be immense. Census population figures will determine the number of representatives to which each state is entitled in the U.S. House of Representatives, and Oregon's count will shape the state legislature into the 21st Century.

In addition to the political impact, billions of dollars in federal and state funds are redistributed to local and tribal governments based on population, age, income, and other census statistics, to meet urgent community needs. Census Day is April 1, 1990.

Forestry students recognized

Stream enhancement work and rehabilitation efforts by Madras High School Forestry students have been recognized by the United States Department of Agriculture.

A plaque presented to Forestry instructor Bill Wysham recognizes the students' achievements in work done at Mud Springs and on Willow Creek.

Students are learning that Forestry is a multiple-use resource and that the health of the forest depends on many things including wildlife, range and water resources.

The Forestry class has constructed fences, planted grass and other vegetation, and built gabions and log weirs to increase water in the streambeds.

Forestry student Joe Boise works on Willow Creek project.
