"Spilyay Speaks"

Communications is a highly misused word in many organizations in the world today. At almost every tribal management meeting, this word is brought up and possible solutions are discussed thoroughly but are never really applied to their potential.

There could be a lot of information that could be put to good use, but something is lacking somewhere. Either the person who has the information is reluctant to share what he knows for certain, sometimes unknown, reasons. Perhaps it could be that he feels he has no right to reveal any information for public knowledge because it may infringe on his job. Or, there is someone who has to give final approval for release of information that is for the public and never gets around to doing his part.

Spilyay Tymoo plays the roll of a communications outlet on the reservation, but in many instances, we can offer only limited information to the general readership because of that lack of communication. Many phone calls are made ask for information on various projects that we feel are newsworthy for tribal members. Many times people promise to call back but never do. Is this a way of saying you don't have any comments and are getting off the hook by saying, "it slipped my mind." Not only Spilyay Tymoo has this problem, it happens all over the country all the time. Somehow news gets out without us knowing about it until we read it in an outside newspaper and the question comes up, "Didn't you know about that? Why wasn't it in the Spilyay Tymoo?"

This is a tribal newspaper and we are here to produce news for the tribal membership, but without getting all the information thoroughly and accurately, we are unable to provide news and/or information to the members of the tribe. "Ahh-na-chi-toon."

Art being solicited for display in Australia

To the Editor,

My name is Carole Walters and I presently live in California although I have been an Australian resident for the past twenty years.

The Australian people, after understanding their own aboriginal culture, are curious and appreciative of other indigenous cultures throughout our world. I was recently in Australia and what I found was a great desire to learn about American Indian culture and art.

I saw in the market places all varieties of Indonesian, Oriental and African arts and crafts but I saw virtually no American Indian artwork, either in jewelry, basketry or painting. When I spoke to Australian galleries about their lack of American Indian art they expressed a great fascination and desire to know about the North American Indian culture. Perhaps because Australia is half way around the world no one has exposed the Australians to the aboriginal Americans.

I am currently studying the anthropological and artistic histories of North American Indian tribes. It is my wish to see other cultures exposed to the art of the Americans.

cans so that we may enrich other peoples to a culture rich in history and values.

What I propose to do is buy art produced by the people living on North American reservations and export this to reputable galleries in Australia. If there are people producing arts and crafts on your reservation or if you have significant information about your tribe that might be of interest to others, I would very much appreciate a call or a letter from you. If you are at all interested on any of these levels please contact me. I hope to hear from you soon.

Sincerely,
Carole Walters

Suppah doing well

To the Editor,

I would like to commend my brother, Loren R. Suppah, for striving out for his goals in life—college, varsity cross country, job, modeling, song writing and dancing.

Loren has acquired a modeling contract for himself in London, England. Loren left for London on December, 10. He has been modeling since last October to acquire this trip to London.

Respite caregivers sought

The Easter Seal Society is looking for caregivers for the Respite program. This is providing short-term relief to families caring for a family member experiencing disabilities. The caregivers provide a watchful eye and companionship while the family member goes to the market or just gets a breather from the house.

The qualifications for the Respite program are patient, compassionate and caring individuals with a start pay of $4.25 per hour, part-time position and active seniors are especially welcome. Need to start a chapter in Warm Springs and Madras area.

For more information contact Carol Hammett at 389-8388 or 389-8998 or Wilbur Wong at 475-6679.

Happy first Birthday Curtis!

Lots of love,
Mom, Dad & Mychal
